THE

Antient Religion

OF THE

GENTILES,

AND

CAUSES of their ERRORS

CONSIDER'D:

The Mistakes and Failures of the Heathen Priests and Wise-Men, in their Notions of the Deity, and Matters of Divine-Worship, are

EXAMIN'D;

With regard to their being altogether destitute of

DIVINE REVELATION.

With a Compleat INDEX.

By the Learned and Judicious

Edward Ld HERBERT of Cherbury, &c.

LONDON:

Printed for William Cayloz at the Ship in Pater-noster-Row. 1711.

Antient: Religion

OF THE

GENTILES

CAUSES of their ERRORS

CONSIDERDE

The Mistakes and the Heather Priests and the Heather are Deity, and the man Tries of the Heather are

With regard to their helps alsogether definate of

DIVINE REVELATION.

With a Complate INDEX.

action of

By the Learned and Judicious

Edward L. HERRBERT of Cherbury, &co.

LONDON:

Princed for CCIMIANI CLAPING as the Ship in Paternofter Row. 1711. To the Right Honourable

JOHN EARL of CARBERY,

LORD

VAUGHAN

OF

MOLINGAR

In the Kingdom of Ireland;

Baron of Emmylin
In SOUTH WALES, &c.

The Noble Possessor and Patron of Polite Learning:

This present Translation with all due Submission, is Dedicated by

His Honour's

Most devoted humble Servant,

William Lewis.

THE LOS OF THE STAND AND SHOPE But How He is the state of the second tern of a reduction and their mo more delimination over a substitution of

I

THE

LIFE

OF THE

AUTHOR;

With an Account of his WORKS.

of the ensuing Sheets, was descended of the Antient and Honourable Family of the Herberts, in the County of Monmouth. The Son of Richard Herbert Esquire, and Magdalen his Wife; Daughter of Sir Richard Newport of High-Arcall, in the County of Salop, and afterwards created Lord Newport; of whom that Noble Peer and Patriot the present Earl of Bradford is lineally descended. He was Born in the Castle of Montgomery, and there Educated under a Domestick Tutor, till he arriv'd at sourceen Years of Age.

A 3

A.F.

His

His tender Years Exhibiting such en couraging Specimens, of what his more Adult and Mature would produce; His Parents judg'd it convenient to send him to Oxford, where he was enter'd Gent. Commoner of University College, that no opportunities might be wanting, to cultivate and improve his transcendent Genius, which in its very dawning appear'd so bright and resulgent.

fi

K

C

V

0

2

K

t

tl

d

tl

T.

t

fi

I

8

During his being there, he was neither deficient in Industry nor Indoly to lay a true and solid Foundation of Universal Knowledge and good Literature; with which afterwards he became so eminently accomplished.

Having spent some considerable time in Academical Studies, he Travels, and applies himself to Study the Art of War, and Military Exercises: Nor did that in the least obstruct or retard his making Just and Curious Observations on the Genius and Polity of the Courts where he resided; but being Master of a profound Penetration, the compleat Soldier and Statesman

1 re

is

to n-

pi-

11-ď

er

a fal

ith

nt-

ne

nd

ar,

in ust

ius

esi-

Pe-

tes-

nan

man centred in him; both of which most eminently appear in his incomparable History of Henry the Eighth. Not long after his return Home, his Sovereign, King James the First, as a particular instance of the fingular Value and Esteem he had for fuch extraordinary Merit; made him Knight of the Bath, and his Counsellour in Civil and Military Affairs; and soon afterwards sent him Ambassadour to the Court of France, to procure terms of Accommodation and Relief for the poor Persecuted and Distressed Protestant Subjects of that Kingdom, who groan'd under most intolerable Cruelties and Oppressions from the then predominant Ministry. This difficult Employment for five Years toggther he discharged with undaunted Courage and Resolution, and admirable Dexterity and Address, worthy of the great Character he bare, Maugre all the violent Obstructions and Oppositions he met with from Persons of the greatest Figure and Interest at that Court. At last in the vigorous Profecution of his Commission, he

A 4

con-

confronted De Luyens, then Constable of France, (a most Arrogant, Haughry, and Uncontroulable Person) he resented it so highly, that applying himself to his Master Lewis the XIII. he at last, by his repeated Solicitations, procur'd him to be recall'd.

This rather increas'd than diminish'd his Interest with his own Prince; for King James in the Twenty second Year of his Reign, created him a Peer of Ireland, by

I

i

I

I

T

F

t

9

(t

the Title of Baron of Castle-Island.

After his Decease, King Charles his Son, not only entertain'd him in the same capacity of Counsellour, but in the Fifth Year of his Reign, advanc'd him to the Dignity of a Peer of this Realm, by the Tatle of Baron of Cherbury in the County of Salop.

He was excellently Qualified with the Knowledge of Languages and Arts, and was no less vers'd in the Study of Mankind and Books. He cultivated an intimate Friendship, and kept a constant Correspondence with most of the Learned Men in his Time; and was an industrious Collector, of

d

er

d

ď

ig

IIS

y

n,

a-

th

he

he

ty

he

nd

ind

ate

re-

len

ol-

or,

lector, as well as curious Judge of the most Valuable and Critical Books; as is manifest by the Complaints he makes to the Famous Archbishop Usher, of the Difficulties and Obstructions he met with, in procuring the Learned Mr. Camden's Books.

He hath oblig'd the World with several Excellent tracts in the Latin Tongue. As, De Veritate, Of Truth, Printed at Paris, in the Year 1624. and Reprinted in 1633. afterwards at London, in 1645. Which, for the Sublimity of the Subject, and Delicacy of the Management, hath met with a most welcome Reception amongst the Learned in all Parts. In the Year 1639, it was Translated and Printed in French; a Copy whereof was reposited in the Pope's Library in the Vatican.

De Causis Errorum, una cum Tractatu de Religione Laici, & Appendice ad Sacerdotes. Of the Causes of Errors, with a Tract, Of the Layman's Religion, and an Appendix to the Clergy.

Several

Several excellent Pieces of Poetry; as, Expeditio Buckinghamii Ducis in Rheam In-Julam; The Expedition of the Duke of Buckingham to the Isle of Rhea, in 1630.

Occasional Verses and Poems, Printed at London, in 1665.

Lachryma Lachrymarum, The Spring of Tears, on the most lamented Death of Prince Henry.

veral

And this Subsequent Treatise of the Religion of the Gentiles, and the Causes of their Errors, &c. Publish'd first by the Learned Isaac Vossius, Son to the celebrated Gerrard John Vossius, at Amsterdam, 1663.

When the late Civil and Intestine Wars Distracted and Imbroil'd, this wretched and unhappy Kingdom; the Rebellious Party growing Predominant in those Parts, entirely Demolish'd his Seat, the Castle of Montgomery.

His Son Richard, and afterwards Lord Herbert, Rais'd a Regiment of Foot and a Troop of Horse, for the Service of his Royal Master, maintaining them at his own Charge, and it is very credibly reported,

ed e

ported, that by their often Recruiting, they amounted to no less than Two thousand Eight hundred Men. These he constantly kept up, until his Majesty had entirely lost South Wales; at which time there were but Thirty of both remaining Alive.

of

d

of

of 1e

ir

1-

ed

3.

rs h-

li-

se

he

rd

la

his

his

re-

ed,

Upon the Twentieth of August, in the Year 1648. This Glory of his Country, and Ornament of Learning, Departed this Life, at his House in Great Queen Street; and was Interr'd near the Chancel of the Parish Church of St. Giles in the Fields: On his Tomb-Stone, according to his own direction, is this Inscription.

Hic Inhumatur
Corpus Edwardi Herbert, Equitis Balnei, Baronis de Cherbury & Castle Island; Auctoris Libri cui est Titulus, De Veritate.
Reddor ut Herbæ, Vicessimo die Augustæ, Anno Dom. 1648.

Thus

Thus English'd.

Here lies Interr'd, the Body of Edward Herbert, Knight of the Bath, Baron of Cherbury, and Castle-Island; Author of the Book Intituled, Of Truth. I became as the Grass, On the Twentieth Day of August, 1648.

He left a most Ingenious Design of a Curious and Stately Monument, which he once intended should be Erected for him, Viz.

On the Ground, an Hath-Pace of Fourteen Foot Square; on the midst a Dorick Column, with all its Rights, of Pedestal and Capital, Fifteen Foot in Height. On the Capital of this Column is an Urn, Mounted with an Heart Flambeul, Supported by two Angels. The Foot of the Column is attended by four Angels, at each Corner of the said Hath-Pace; two having Torches Revers'd, extinguishing the Motto of Mortality; the other two holding Palms, the Emblems of Victory.

The

rd

of of as ft,

fa

he

m, en

ın,

al,

of

art

The

els,

wo

the

ing

he

The following Pages, containing a Celebrated Piece of this most deservedly Renown'd Person, and having gain'd such Universal Approbation amongst the Learned; having been Printed twice at Amsterdam, and yet is so very scarce here, that it is feldom met with, and rarely known, but only by the Curious Enquirers into, and Diligent Searchers after Polite Learning; encourag'd the presenting it to our own Country in an English Dress; not questioning but the Intrinsick Value and extraordinary Merit of the Subject will sufficiently atone for any Imbecility in the Translation, and sufficiently recommend it to the Intelligent and Judicious; who will find in it such an ample and compleat Repository of Antient Learning and Mythology, as can scarce be Collected from many Bulky and Voluminous Authors; the whole so well adapted, and pertinently applied, that in a most Emphatical manner it proclaims the profound Judgment, and indefatigable Industry of the Compiler. THE

THE

TO TRUSTED IN THE 1881

CONTENTS

Of the Several

CHAPTERS

CHAP. I.

C

0

0

C

HE Occasion of the whole Work. Pag. 1.

CHAP. II.

The Religious Worship of the Heathens; what they antiently meant by God; what was the first and chief Object of their Worship. p. 7.

CHAP. III.

Why so many various Appellations were formerly given to God, and what they were. p. 22.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Various Worship of the Sun, and his several Names.

OHAP

The Contents.

CHAP. V.

Of the Names of the Planets, and their being reduc'd to the Sun. p. 49.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Worship of the Moon, and its different Names.

p. 52.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Adoration of the five Planets. p. 64.

CHAP. VIII.

I.

bat

rst 7.

rly

22.

eral

32. A P. Of the Adoration of the Fixed Stars. p. 79.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Worship of Heaven. p. 87.

CHAP. X.

Concerning the Adoration of the Four Elements, and their several Names. p. 104.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning the Worship of Heroes, either Proper or Symbolical; what Gods were called Indigetes;

The Contents.

digetes, and who Dii Minorum Gentium.
p. 161.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Worship of the Gods called Consentes & Dii Majorum Gentium. p. 184.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Supream God.

P. 255.

CHAP. XIV.

An Essay, concerning the first Causes of Religion amongst the Heathens. p. 270.

CHÁP. XV.

Of the most Sound parts of the Religion of the Heathens.

p. 297.

CHAP. XVI.

A Censure of the Religion of the Heathens. and the Occasion of it. p. 366.

AX A HO

or Symbolical; what Gods were called in-digetes

AT Horser wing the Winghip of Horocc. either Proper

al

nd iden

ot

y F

lelig

A

Ania

THE

RELIGION

OFTHE

&

4.

55:

ion

70.

the

GENTILES:

CAUSES of their Errors.

CHAP. I.

The Occasion of the whole Work.

THEN, for a long time I had employ'd my most serious Thoughts; in confidering whether any common Means for the obtaining Eteral Salvation, were so proposed to all Mankind, hat from thence we might necessarily conclude and and infer the Certainty of an Universal Divine Pro-66. vidence, I met with many Doubts and Difficulties, ot easie to be folv'd. I found, that very may Fathers of the Church had not only a mean nd contemptible Opinion of the antient divulged deligion of the Heathens, but also absolutely and entirely condemn'd it. The Divines of this st Age also pronounce as severe a Sentence aainst all those that are without their Pale; so that, accorof Mankind must be inevitably sentenced to Eternal Punishment.

This appearing to me too rigid and severe to be consistent with the Attributes of the Most Great and Good GOD, I began to consult the Writings of the Heathens themselves. But when, by their own Histories, I sound their Gods were often not only meer Men, but also some of the most vile; and when I had observed that their Religious Worship, Rites and Ceremonies, were ridiculous and extravagant, I was very much inclined to be of the common Opinion against them. But then again, when I considered that this was altogether incompatible with the Dignity of an Universal Divine Providence, I began to make a diligent Enquiry, whether they meant the same by GOD as we now do.

ha

s

u

h

u

Pr

hi

bei

by

or

en

kin

1

1

pin

Now by GOD we understand a Perfect, Immense, and Eternal Being; and I found, that with them it fometimes fignified Nature, or a certain Imperfect, Finite, and Transitory Power; fo that not only Heaven, the Planets, Stars, Etherial and Aerial Spirits; but those Men also who had deferved well of Mankind in general, or their own Country in particular, were unanimously translated into the Number of their Deities. Their Em perours also (some of whom were the worst of Men) were deified in their life-time; and even the Fever, Fear, and Paleness were esteem'd Gods and Goddesses by them; so that they ascribed Divine Honour to whatfoever was above the common Rank of Mankind, or exceeded the Appre hension of the Vulgar: But still it is very evident, that where-ever we find the Attributes o Summus, Optimus, Maximus; Most Supreme, Most Good

art

er-

to eat

ngs

risi

not

le;

-10

and

of

1 a-

her

Di-

En-

DC

Im-

that cer-

fo

erial

de-

OWI

anf

Em

ft of even

God

ribed com-

ppre

evi

es o

Mod

Good, and Most Great, they meant the same GOD and common Father with us. So that he Homonomy of the Word being explained, he Doubts that arise by comparing our GOD vith theirs, will foon be cleared.

But yet neither their Religious Worship or Rites, could ever make me have an ill Opinion of he Common People, they being the Invention of the Priests only; wherefore this Crime ought olely to be imputed to their Great Men, and not o the Populace, who were only passive in the natter. I suppose none will deny but that Priests have introduced Superfition and Idolatry, as well s fown Quarrels and Diffentions where-ever they ame: This inclin'd me not to make fo rath and beremptory a Determination, concerning the Fuure State of the Laity, as some Divines have done; hey being only culpable, for totally devoting and ubjecting themselves to the Authority of their Priefts. Their great Defection from the Pure Worhip of the Supreme God being justly to be attributed o the Sacerdotal Order, put me upon the Enquiy, whether amongst those Heaps of Ethnical Superstitions, a Thread of Truth might be found, by the affistance of which it was possible for them o extricate themselves out of that Labyrinth of Eror, in which they were involv'd.

Upon this, Five undeniable Propositions preently occur'd; which not only we, but all Mankind in general, must needs acknowledge:

I. That there is one Supreme God.

II. That he ought to be worshipped.

III. That Vertue and Piety are the chief Parts of Di-

IV. That we ought to be forry for our Sins, and repent of them.

V. That Divine Goodness doth dispense Rewards and Punishments both in this Life, and after it.

All these I will explain at large, at the End of my Book, after I have treated of the following Parts of their Religion; as also shewn where that Thread my be found, by the help whereof (as we conceive) the most perspicacious amongst the Heathens got out of this Labyrinth.

Let not my Reader think I have made use of the word Labyrinth here inconsiderately; for as there were formerly four Labyrinths, very artificially contrived; viz. The Cretick, Egyptian, Lemnian and Italian: fo these Places more especially have furnished the rest of the World with almost all their Superstitious Worship. I could heartily wish the Modern Divines were more confiderate in their Determinations concerning the Souls of the Heathens or Pagans. The most rigid, such generally as are least acquainted with Learning in general, but especially Humane Learnning, express themfelves much after this manner. " After the Fall " of Adam, all Mankind was formed and produced "out of a degenerate Mass; some of them, out " of the mere good pleasure of God and the intervention of the Death of Christ, were elected to Eternal Glory; but the far greater part,

" nay even those that never heard of the Name of Christ, were reprobated and determin'd to Eternal Perdition; and that the most innocent and commendable Lives the Heathens could lead, would avail them nothing, in regard their Works " were meerly Moral; and upon that account al" together infignificant.

Now

h

1

Lau

Chi d

hi

ot

Col

Dr :

ing

Mos

nera

take

10 tion

Ima

of or

Han

Grea

out

ffer

her

non

d t our

ecti

mu

Cen

ave

A

cho

he]

kip

iate

T

re-

and

of

ing

hat

we

ea-

the

ere

on-

and

ish-

Su-

the

neir

[ea-ally

ral,

em-

Fall

iced

out

inele-

part,

e 01

ter-

and ead .

orks

t al-

Now when I perceived that they resolved the Causes of Eternal Salvation or Damnation only inthe Good Pleasure of God, and the Death of Christ; I found that their Opinion was groundd not on Reason, but some peremptory Decrees, thich no body did pretend to know, and I could not think that they were fo privy to the fecret Counfels of God, as to be able to establish any thing for certain; wherefore I left them, as entertaining mean, base, and unworthy Thoughts of the Most Good and Great GOD, and Mankind in general. How could I believe, that a Just God could take Pleasure in the Eternal Reprobation of those whom he never afforded any Means of Salvation, or endued with Souls made after his own Image; and whom he forefaw must be damned of absolute necessity, without the least hopes or possibility of escaping it? I could not underfrand how they could call that God Most Good and Great, who created Men only to damn them, without their knowledge, and against their will.

Then I met with some other Divines, who sserted, That Christ was revealed to such Heathens as led pious and honest Lives, at the very moment of their Death, and so they were conveyed to Paradise. But their Opinion being neither ounded on History, Tradition, or Rational Contecture, it appeared to me very improbable; but must needs confess, these Divines shew much more Tenderness towards Humane Kind, though they ave nothing folid to support their Affertion.

At last, I consulted those who are called the School-Men, to see if their Sentiments concerning he Heathens were more just and regular; but they kipping from Faith to Reason, and then immeliately again from Reason to Faith, with wonderful

B 3

Now

ful agility; and finding them so very nice and subtil in their Distinctions as to split an Hair, I could not receive the least Satisfaction from them. Amongst other Axioms, I found this an established one amongst them: Facientibus quod in se est, non deesse Gratiam Salutarem: Saving Grace is never wanting, to those that do all that is in their power.

Then I had recourse to other Authors, but especially Crellius, a very Learned Man, who has written concerning the Souls of the Heathens; he quotes several very excellent Passages upon this subject out of the most Antient Fathers; by which I found they were of Opinion, that fome of the best amongst the Heathens, through the infinite Mercy of God, might be capable of Eternal Salvation. I foon embraced their Opinion, not feeing how the Doctrine of an Universal Divine Providence could be folved otherwise, than that some Means should be afforded unto all Men, by which they might come to God, And feeing that Nature or Common Providence, did supply us here with all things that were necessary and convenient for Food and Raiment; I could not conceive how the same God, either could or would, leave any Man quite destitute (either by Nature or Grace) of the Means of obtaining a more Happy State; and tho the Heathens did not make so good use of them as they might have done, yet the Most Good and Great GOD, was not in the least to be charged with their Miscarriage.

I know it is a generally receiv'd Opinion, That Common Providence doth not afford sufficient Means, without the Concurrence of Grace and Particular Providence: But my Design is to make it evident, That an Universal Providence is extended to all Mankind. Now forasmuch as the Heathers fub-

ould

Aone

deeffe

, to

but has

; he fub-

hich the

inite

Ilva-

fee. Pro-

ome

nich

ture

with

for the Man the tho

nem

and vith

hat

ent

and

ake

ded

ens (as

as the Holy Scriptures testifie, and Learned Dirines acknowledge) worshipped the same God as we do; had the same abhorrence of Sin; beliered Rewards and Punishment after this Life; I cannot but think, that after they had led a Good Life, they were made Partakers of the Fulness of that Divine Grace; especially in regard they knew the most rational and perspicuous Parts of the True Divine Worship.

I pretend not to defend the Gross of the Heathen Religion, which I always effeemed foolish, incongruous, and abfurd; but only propose those Truths which shined in the midst of their greatest Obscurity. Now when they mixt Superstitions and Fictions with them, and had polluted their Souls with fuch Crimes as no Repentance could fufficiently purge and expiate, their Destruction was justly owing to themselves; but let Glory be to the Great GOD for ever. Whether these Means for attaining a Better State, are so sufficiently effectual, that Eternal Happiness will be the necesfary Consequence, shall be discoursed of hereaster in its place.

CHAP. II.

The Original of the Religious Worship of the Heathens, what they antiently meant by GOD; what was the first and chief Object of Worship.

HE Mind of Man having exceeded its known Limits, that in all Ages Men were endeavouring after a more Happy State than what they at preient enjoy; as not only the indigent and poor Condition of Man, but Religious Worship and Sound Sound Philosophy do every where declare. There has been scarce any Person that ever found so much Delight, Satisfaction and Enjoyment in this Life, as to perfuade himself that he was only defign'd for that End; or who after a just Discharge of his Conscience, had not some hopes of, and from a strong impulse of Mind did not earnestly defire after fomething more excellent than what this World can afford. For our Mind is so noble in its own nature, that it directly desires Eternal Things, and at last can only be satisfied with, and acquiesce in them; the frail and flippery State of Mortals declines, even in the very height of the Enjoyment of those Pleasures which only please the External Senses: Wherefore the Antients thought they ought not to rest satisfied with them; so that not only the miserable and distressed, but also all pious and good Men, as if they were tired and fatiated with every thing here, endeavour'd after fomething beyond them, though they knew not what it was. From hence first proceeded the Notion of an Unknown Deity. For God inspiring all Men with a desire of an Eternal and more Happy State; he tacitly discovered himself, who is Eternal Life, and perfectly Happy.

Now, in regard God cannot be worshipped according to the Excellency of his Dignity, which the most sagacious Reason can never penetrate into: He therefore manisested Himsels by the most Excellent Fabrick of this World; the Parts whereof when the Antients view'd and contemplated, it put them upon an anxious and strict Enquiry, whether there was any thing here, or any where else, that was Eternal; knowing very well, that sading and transitory things could produce nothing but what was fading and transitory.

In

h

h

al

L

fa

w of bo th an Su

ch

he

to

no

no

th.

tin

we the

Sp

lal

be

the

Vei

ne

un lik

of

ге

ch fe,

or his

m ire

rld

vn

nd in

le-

nt

nal

ley

nat

lfo

ind

rd

ew

the

ing

ap-Eac-

ich

ate

oft

re-

it

ry,

ere

hat

ing

In

In which Scrutiny, finding that all things in this sublunary World, as they had a Beginning, fo they were subject to Corruption; they began to observe he Heaven and Stars, and found that there was certain eternal and happy state in them only. Then observing the Stars more accurately, they hought their Motion, Heat, Light and Influence o be at least the next Causes of the Production of all Things which are feen here. So that the most Learned amongst the Antients took the Rule and Reason of those things which are always in the fame state, from the Fixed Stars; of those things which are subject to change, from the Planets; and of those that are obnoxious to viciflitude, from both together. This nice Opinion of theirs was the occasion that they paid them no small Adoration and Worship, though not such as belong'd to the Supreme Deity; but such only as appertained to his chief Ministers who were visible to them. From hence the appellation of Oids or GOD was given to a Star, but not under the same acceptation we now take it: For the Name GOD formerly was not only given to the Stars, but also to all things that were very beneficial to Mankind; nay fometimes to those things that were hurtful; as is very well known to the Learned. Amongst the Stars, those that were of the first Magnitude, greatest Splendour and Virtue, as the Sun and Moon; and at last the rest of the Planets in general, were deisied before the Fixed Stars. Amongst the Planets, after the two great Luminaries, the Star Phosphorus or Venus was most celebrated, which, as the other Planets afterwards were, was worshippped far and near under various Names. Mercury was the next, being like the Phosphorus, either the Servant or Companion of the Sun, and moving round him; being sometimes above above him, and sometimes below him. Mars, Jupiter and Saturn were not known to the Antients; though all the Erraticks, besides those discovered by Galileus's Telescope, were very well known a long time ago, and were distinguish'd from each other by their colours; Venus being always white, Mercury blue, Jupiter red and yellow, Mars of a sanguine colour, near purple or black, Saturn lead-colour and pale. They also observed that they did not sparkle, as the Fix'd Stars do; unless Mars, who sometimes brandishes his Rays after a threatning manner.

b

Sti

v

h

du ic

u

Su

S

ve

die

ble

de

th

W

his

th

H

Di

as

ca

ou

pe

the

W

M

ha

In following Ages, some very admirable Philosophers attributed Fancy or internal Sense to them; and others Feeling, Sight, and Hearing alfo, (which Senses Hippocrates allows Fire;) others again were of opinion that they were Animated, Intelligent, and Rational; left a noble Body should want a noble Form. So that it is not much to be admir'd, if Mankind was prone to pay them a fort of Adoration or Worship, (though of an inferiour degree) in regard Nature has implanted it in Man, to render a due Veneration to all those, from whom he has received any Benefits. Besides, every one prefers those things that move of themfelves, before those that are motionless; what is fplendid and shines, to the obscure and dark; the good, to the hurtful; and eternal things to those that fade and perish. Upon this account they were of opinion, that greater Worship and Reverence was due to the Stars, especially the Sun and Moon, than to any Mortal whatfoever, though arrived to the utmost pitch of Honour and Dignity. According to Josephus Acosta and others, the Indians are of the same Opinion to this very day; they wor-Thip all those things whose Influence they observe be most prevalent in Natural Productions. Relition being progressive, they began to enquire, Whether there was any GOD or Deity that presidd over the Stars themselves? which Opinion soon obtained. For when the Antients observed not only different, but quite contrary Essects in the Stars, they soon acknowledg'd one Supreme GOD, who governed all things; to whom they thought the most prosound Worship and Adoration was due: Yet still they retain'd a particular Veneration for the Stars; because by their Immortal Nature, they were first led to the Knowledge of the Supreme GOD.

pits;

by

ng

rse ury

ine

Juc

not

ho

ing

fo-

m; fo,

2-

In-

uch

em an

ofe,

des,

em-

et is

the

rere nce

loon,

d to

COI-

are

·10V

erve

Now, although the Worship of the Supreme GOD. s more antient in itself, being written in the Heart. yet in regard our Ancestors received the first Indications of Him from those splendid incorruptible Bodies, the Sun and Moon, if not the most antient, yet certainly the most universal Worship (fuch as it was) was paid to the Stars; as is evident from many Authors; till at last by degrees, they came to adore the Supreme Deity. For the Power, Wisdom, and Goodness of God shining in his Works, and he being best manifested to us by them, they could not come to the knowledge of Him any other way. Men in the First Ages (by the Dictates of Conscience) in hopes of a better Life, as the Effect of Divine Worship and Love; were carried from thence to the Stars, the most illustrious Work of the Supreme God, and so worshipped GOD himself in his Works. Neither was there any other Form of Religion at that time.

From hence arises a Question, Whether any other Worship of GOD could be justly instituted, besides a Pure Mind and Holy Life? For the Heathens hitherto had nothing to direct them, but common Notions imprinted

V

u

100

h

d

ed

to

be

w

di

be

fic

the

(1

cla

ple

ma

Di

T

Eg G

fol

the

N

alı

th

tin

pe

ab

mo

imprinted in their Hearts. Afterwards a certain Sect of Men sprang up, who persuaded them to entertain Rites and Ceremonies. This is evident from Religion's being formerly called Sun Superia, and the fame word man with the Fews fignifies both GOD and Demons, as the Learned Vossius observes, Sanbedrin, C. 7. §. 10. For (fay they) if any thing of Grandeur deserves external Honour, and if even Majesty itself is chiefly supported by Rites and Ceremonies, ought not the greatest Adoration to be paid to that GOD from whom are all things? Ought not his Chief Ministers also to be adored; in regard the Supream God cannot be worshipped fuitable to the Dignity of his Majesty, when they are neglected, who precede him in a certain Order, though not in Dignity: for Sacred Rites ought to be performed to the Stars, which through the Stars center in God himself; this is the only way we have to approach to the Supreme God.

These, and some such-like specious Reasons, prevailed with the Vulgar; yet they still continued ignorant what Adoration was to be paid, and what Rites and Ceremonies were to be performed to the Supreme God.

In process of time, as the Rabbies inform us, there arose salse Prophets, who told the People that they were commanded by GOD, to worship this and that Star; and so at last all the Stars: And that they must Sacrifice, and make certain Oblations to them, build Temples for them, set up their Images, which were worshipped by the Women and Children, and the rest of the ignorant part of Mankind. For this end, they told them of Representations of their own Invention; saying, it was the Image of the Star, revealed to them by Prophecy. Then Men began to set up Images in Temples under

hap. II.

in

to

nt

a,

th

es,

ng

en

e-

be

s?

1;

ed

ey

)rtes

igh

nly

ns,

ied

hat

the

us,

hat

this

and

ons

na-

and

an-

en-

the

cy.

under

the

er Trees, and on the tops of Mountains and Hills. Ifterwards they affembled together, and worshiped them publickly; afferting, That all Good and will did proceed from them, and therefore they ught to be devoutly worshipped and revered: From this Worship their Priests promis'd them Properity, and Increase of all things commanding hem what to do, and what to abstain from.

Then there arose Impostors, (as may be gatherd from the same Rabbi and others) who pretended that the very Star, Sphere, or Angel itself spoke to them, told them how they would be worshipbed, and deliver'd them a Form, directing them what to perform, and what to avoid. Thus it was diffused all over the World, That Images were to be worshipped, and the chief Way was, by Sacrifice and Adoration: thus far the Rabbi. But how they came by this Information from the GOD (for fo they called the Star) they publickly declare; faying, that they lay all night in the Temple of that Star or GOD, and that his Commands were deliver'd or revealed to them in a Dream; for there was no greater Certainty of the Truth of Oracles at that time.

This Custom was originally derived from the Egyptians, who had the first knowledge of the GODS or Stars, built Temples, and order'd solemn Assemblies to meet in Groves. From thence it came to the Syrians, and neighbouring Nations, and then to the Greeks and Romans, (for almost all Religion and Superstition came from the East;) and was not abolished till Constatine's time; who being sensible of the Villanies that were perpetrated in Temples under that pretext, quite abolished that Custom. By this means, so many monstrous Fictions and Abuses were spread amongst the ignorant and credulous Vulgar, upon whom they obtruded their Precepts of what fort soever (for it was esteemed impious to contradict them) although they were supported by no better Authority than a Dream.

But the Priest had not so easily imposed upon the People, if they had not intermixt them with Prophecies of things to come; which were always deliver'd in ambiguous and doubtful Terms, which if they happen'd but in the least to prove true, it gained them vast Credit and Authority; but if on the contrary they prov'd false, yet still the Priests gained their Ends by them; for if any thing Ill or Unfortunate happen'd, instead of some Good they had predicted should come to pass, they prefently faid it was occasion'd by the People's Sins, which diverted the GOD from his intended Kindnels; and therefore they ought to offer Sacrifices, (a great part whereof always came to their share) perfuading them that was the only way to appeale the incenfed Deity: But if fomething happen'd that was prosperous, instead of some evil they had foretold; they then faid it was the Effect of their own Prayers, and other Acts of Devotions, by which they had diverted the impending Evil: So that they never ran any Risque on the account of the Event of their Prophecies; for however things fell out, they were always fecure, and loft not the least Reputation or Esteem with the People.

The Observation also of the Course of the Stars, their Rising and Setting, and various Conjunctions, and at what Time, was then made; but more especially in Egypt, where the Priests lay in the open Air all Night, the Weather there being always very serene; promising much to themselves by predicting the Fertility of the Season, and

many

u

ve ir

ai on

co

de

Pla

Ph

Ver

coli

of

bu

Syn

pe

otl

on,

Hy

Fo

tic

ver

in

infi

the

pai

his

nany fuch-like things, which took extremely with the common People; but this being not o be to be carried on without Charge, they proured Stipends to be fettled on them.

ey

gh

1 a

on ith

al.

ns,

ve

out

the

ing

ood

re-

ns,

nd.

ces,

re)

afe

hat

ore-

wn

nich

hey

rent

out,

east

tars,

ncti-

but

y in eing

elves

and

By this means, the most abject Persons soon grew rery rich, and at last were of such great repute and steem, that the greatest Men of their Country were elected into their College; nothing conducing more to keep the People in absolute subjection, than to make them believe, that it was they only that knew the Mind and Will of GOD, and could deliver Oracles; so that at last the very Cacars themselves were chosen into the Sacerdotal Order. Cicero also was made an Augur.

Afterwards Divine Honour was paid to the Seven Planets, but especially to the Sun, and Moon, and Phosphorus (which is called Lucifer, Hesperus, Vesper, Venus, &c.) and then to Mercury, who is called Marcolis, Margamah, 'Espuss and Súncow; and the rest of the Planets. Then to all the Stars of Heaven, but more especially the Great Dog, who is called Syrius. Next Pisces, who were called Syrian Deities, and signified Cupid and Venus, were worshipped; first by the Eastern People, and afterwards by others. But observing that Storms arose from Orion, Winds from the Goat and Kids, Rain from the Hyades and Pleiades, Heat from the Caniculi, and the Fore-parts of the Lion; they honour d these in particular with Divine Worship.

Then they proceed to enquire, Whether the Heaven itself ought not to be worshipped, as well as the Stars; in regard it only of all things, seemed to be immense and infinite? The most Famous Philosophers, as well as the Priests, agreed that Divine Honour ought to be paid to the Heaven; and not only the Stagyrite, but his Master also was of this Opinion; for he gives

this

this Reason: Every thing from which any thing proceeds, is the Cause of it; but the Operation of GOD is Immortality, and that is a Perpetual Life; wherefore Per. petual Motion is necessary in GOD: In regard therefore the Heaven is such, (for it is a sort of a Divine Body) it has a Spherical Body, which naturally moves round. Thus both Priefts and Philosophers not only made the Stars Gods, and acknowledged another Supreme DEITT, that governed them all; but also made the Heaven itself a GOD. The Seven Planets had Seven Intelligences presiding over them, in such an order, that they believed the Intelligence of the Lunar Orb to be less than the Solar; and those of the Seven Planets, Iess than that of the Primum Mobile. Thus they constituted Intelligences, or Movers of the Planets, with deference to the Snpreme Mover.

Then the Question was, Whether this Heaven we see was a Body, or not, and had Right and Left, Superiour and Inferiour, Thin and Thick Parts? Whether it moved by an Appetite? they being of Opinion, that Motion would not exist in any thing, that was endued with Life, without Appetition; and many fuch like things, which were discussed by the Learned, but did not in the least affect the Vulgar, to whom it was fufficient to know, that the Heaven which the Stars were, ought to be worshipped for a GOD.

This Plurality of Gods, occasion'd Variety of Worship; as the natural Consequence of their Diversity; which the crasty Priests managed to their own Advantage, inventing feveral Modes and Forms, often declaring what Adoration was to be paid, and with what Sacrifices each GOD was to be pleased, appeased, and made propitious. Hence arose so many monstrous forts of Worship, which were spread all the World over; the Priests every where

ed

1

Z

he

in

tha

e ft

u

chi

ne

re

DO

ce

mo

am

of.

hi

he

ma

ver

co

ap

ma

Fo

rei

on

are

gi

th

Ŧ

25

27.

re

it d.

de

me

de ad

ın

of 0-

0-ne

ve

eit

0-

d

id

as

75

of 1-ir

d

e

o

h

y

e

are

here imposing their Imaginary Dreams on the

But what is yet still worse, whereas Men ought expect solid Peace of Mind, only as the genuine of the first of true Piety; or whensoever they happen to deviate from it, by sincere Repentance afterwards; they made the whole matter to consist only in Rites and Ceremonies, which they themselves performed; as if their GODS would hear none but them, or that there was no other Mediator betwixt the GOD Sand Men, but the Priests.

When the Worship of the Superiour Orbs was establish'd in the World, then they began to enruire, Whether the Earth ought not to be adored? and his also obtain'd. For when they observ'd, that next after the Sun and Stars, the Earth afforded the reatest Affistance for the Production and Nutrition of Man, and all kind of Animals; our Ancestors paid a very great Veneration to it, and the most Learned Philosophers gave it the Preheminence amongst the Elements, calling it the most Antient of the Deities: for, according to their Opinion, Nature first formed the Earth, and then all other things for its fake. At last, the Priests also called her Antiqua Mater, the Old Mother; who, they faid, married Calum or the Heaven; making the Heaven Male, and the Earth Female; upon which account, the Greeks and Romans called them Dii ραμίλιο, or Nuptial-Gods. They brought a great many Arguments for the Adoration of the Earth; For, fay they, if we ought to reverence our Parents, much more the Earth, from which not only our Parents themselves, but all things that are necessary and convenient for us, have their original; and into whose Bosom, after we pass out of this Life, we are received. The Heavens indeed are far more excellent than all Inferiour Beings, but they are so remote from us, that they are the Objects of our Sight only; but the Earth has permitted us to inhabit her. All our Right and Authority is limited within its Dimensions, and exifts only by its Courtesie: therefore there is very great reason why we should adore it. Thus the credulous and easie People were foon persuaded to this Veneration of the Earth. Calum and Terra, Heaven and Earth being made the Principal Deities, according to Varro; they were called Serapis and Isis in Egypt; Daantes and Aftarte by the Phanicians; and in some places, Saturn and Ops.

Then the Question was started, Whether Fire should not be adored, as well as the Earth? Now, in regard all Terrene things act by Heat, fo that Fin resembles Form more than Matter; like the Stars, emitting its Light beyond the extent of its Heat, and likewise not being subject to Corruption, and never ceasing to be, as long as it is supplied with Fuel; therefore it was accounted amongst the Number of the GODS. Its Worship was very antient, as we shall shew in its place, but such as tended only to the Glory of the Supreme GOD; he being called by the Jews, Deut. 4. a confuming Fire; but for the Exposition of that Place, I refer you to the Divines.

The Priefts, being not in the least overburthened with these Loads of Worship, proceed to adore the Water. Heat, say they, cannot perfect the Act of Generation, but would rather destroy all things; and that its Coolness kept the violent Heat of the Fire within due bounds; its Moisture softens the Dryness and Hardness of the Earth, and reduces all things to a just Temperament; its Situation also was above the Earth, and supplies Mankind with the Asth molt

ut

og ba

vil

ro

ee

OI

Vai

he

10 hro

her

V

vhi

ast ein

he.

red

art

Mar

Dea e a

for ithe chap. II.

e

1-

1-

X-

ry

e-

115 ren

ng

ot;

ne

ire

re-

Fire

ars,

and

ne. Fu-

ım.

ent, ded

beire;

u to ned

the et of

ngs;

the

moft

nost necessary and convenient Nourishment; for nen can live longer without Meat than Drink: that Il things, more directly proceeded from it; an Exmple of which a very ingenious Philosopher long nce proposed. Suppose, says he, a great Vessel capale of containing some Acres of Earth, which being exactly reighed, Sow Corn or Herbs there, which shall be pater'd by the Rain only; weigh the first years Crop, and on for several years weigh the whole produce. Lastplant Oak, Beach, Fir, Elm, or other Trees there, nd let them grow to their full Height and Bigness; then ut them down and weigh them all; add all their Weight ogether, and it will be found at least equal to the Earth bat was at first put into the Vessel, which nevertheless vill not be diminished. Which Experiment plainly roves that all this new Accession of Matter proeeded only from the Water which fell upon the Earth. for this Reason Divine Worship was paid to the Vater; which the Persians esteem'd so sacred, that hey thought it impious to wash their hands, spit, or low their nose into running Streams, or indeed, to hrow any thing that was in the least fordid into hem.

No other Element besides the Air only remained, to which Divine Adoration was not paid; which, for its aft Extention, feem'd to lay a fufficient Claim to it; eing divided into three Regions, and reaching from he Earth to the Moon, must needs be near an hunred thousand times larger than this our Globe of Carth and Water. So also the absolute necessity dan has for it, for without it he would be Blind, Deaf and Dumb. There is no other Elements can the e attracted in by the Lungs; and tho a Man, in es all found state of Health, may live four days without all lither meat or drink (for I do not now speak of some he the Ashmatical persons of whom we have strange ac-C 2 counts in history) yet he cannot live one moment without Air. Some Philosophers have endeavour ed to prove the Divinity of the Air by many reasons

r

is 21

f

a

er' av

en

ha

ort

ot

nl

Vr

fte

the

ve

dut

15

ome

0 art

Vo

ay,

ler F

ed

hen fter

ut 1rEt

leia

but particularly Anaximenes and Diogenes Apollionates and Ennius amongst the Poets. It is Jupiter I speak of, whom the Greeks call the Air, and is the Wind and Clouds, and afterwards the Rain; from Rain proceeds Cold and the Wind becomes Air again; which is confirmed by this common expression, Sub dio vel sub Divo, and sul Jove, in the open Air; Jupiter being some times ta ken figuratively by the Antients for the Air; o which more at large in its proper place. Thus A nima the Soul is derived from die, to blow or breath Lactantius quotes Varro faying, that the Soul is Air re ceiv'd in at the Mouth, made lukewarm in the Lungs beated in the Heart, and diffused in the Body.

The Antients did not only worship the mol noble and excellent Parts of the World, but were of opinion they ought to adore the Universe it telf, a the most beautiful Image of GOD; of which I shall ipeak more at large.

In process of time this Adoration grew so exten five, that they worshipped Men. For Man being composed of the four Elements, to whom Divin Worship was already paid, and deriving the mol noble part of his Original from Heaven; Man all excelling the Elements themselves, and having many things in him which cannot be produced ou of the four Qualities of the Elements, however mixt

Man alfo, not only excelling all other Animals but one Man being more excellent than another they worshipped those Men, whose meritorious A then chievments, and noble and brave Actions had admir vanced them above others; under that Notion de rel figning only to adore Virtue her felf, who is worth of the utmost Veneration. Wha

nt

II-

75, ge-he

the 1710 ol

b ful

ta-

O A

ath

78ngs

or e o

, a hal

mof

Wha

What now remains, is, to shew how a particular rt of Worship was paid to certain Animals; but. is not being Universal, but only limited to a few lations, and more especially the Egyptians, I shall omit it. For the a general Superstition ay be called a fort of Religion, that which is of a ery fmall extent only, cannot lay claim to it. I ave call'd nothing Religion but what has been enerally entertain'd in most Parts of the World. have also shewn the most Antient and Universal orts of Religious Worship, which I have collected om the best Authors extant; so that if the Jews only are excepted, who, according to facred Vrit, were the most antient People (but were esteemed to worship a particular GOD unknown to other Nations) there was no other Religion diffused over the whole World, nor any other almost to be bund now in the West-Indies, unless where Christianiis planted, or in the East-Indies, but where Maometanism has spread it self, and the Christian Religion of late in some parrs. I do not deny but some particular Rites were intermixt with this general ten Worship; but so, that the Indians, still to this very ying day, agree about them, excepting the Adoration of vine Men only, as is testified by very credible Authors.

From which it is evident, that they first worshipall sed the Supreme God and Moderator of all things; then the Sun and Moon, Phosphorus and Mercury; fterwards the rest of the Planets and the fixed Stars, nixt ut more especially Canis and Pisces, then Arion, mals Arcturus and Corona, the Goat and Kids, Hyades and ther leiades, Caniculi, and the fore-part of the Lyon; as A hen the four Elements. And in short all the most minent Parts of the World, and at last the Universe and telf, as the most perfect Image of the Supreme God; orth et each of these was worshipped after a different manner, as is evident from their different Rites and Ceremonies. For, as was said before, they all esteemed that to be a GOD; which had an extraordinary Instuence upon inseriour Beings, but more especially Man: all these in their several degrees were the Objects of Ethnic Adoration; but in reference to those things that had a direct respect to Virtue and Piety, they had not only recourse to their Religion, but Philosophy; their Laws and those internal Principles written upon their Hearts.

ts eg

re

De

he

en

e

he

no

be

loi Bei

gro

bur par

ed dan

nol befored by .

lect

ther

anti

Rite

Lan

rem

Benefits

These then were those GODS or Deities to whom the Antients paid their Adoration; who also thought Worship due to those Men who had deserved well of their own Country or Mankind in general. What now remains, is, to prove and corroberate these things (at least the chiefest of them) by the Testimonies of antient Authors; so that is may evidently appear what the Religion of the Heathens really was; of which we shall give our Opic nion at the end of the Book.

CHAP. III.

Why so many various Appellations were former given to God, and what they were.

THE Names by which the Antients called their GODS were many and copious, every one flid ling them according to his own Country Language and Pleasure, and those different Epithets that were given them were at last added into the Number. This was approved of by a very grave and judicious sen. 1. 5. de Author, who says, that GOD may Ben. 6. 17. have as many Names as he dispense enefits; fo that if there were thirty thousand Names f GOD, as Oenomaus and Hesiod exhibit; his Benets must be supposed to be as numerous. Indeed, in egard the Bleffings of the Most Good and Great God re innumerable, it cannot feem strange that e should be worshipped under innumerable Denominations. But although the Attributes of he most Supreme God are infinite, his Virtues exending themselves beyond our Comprehension nd Expression; yet 'tis my Opinion that he cannot e represented to us by any better or more just Epihers than those which the Indians have, in all ages, nd at this very time still continue to give him; iz. Most Good and Great; for he cannot be said to e Most Good, without an infinite Power and Will of loing Good; nor Most Great, unless he dispenses his Benefits universally.

And here we undertake a very difficult Task to grope in the dark Mists of Antiquity, and Shades of our Ancestors.

nd

all

-10

ore

ees

re-

to eir

inom

160

er.

ge-

be-

by ti lea-

pi

ero

heir

nage

ber.

ciou

may

enfe efits

I shall begin with the Fews, although the incomparable Fof. Scaliger raises an Objection here, seeming to favour the opinion of the Dynaste mentioned by Manethon, That there were Ages long before Adam. And the Diodorus Siculus and the Chinese Chronology, mention things done many thousand years before the Creation of the World, as it is delivered by Moses; yet in regard the first Authority is derived from the antient Books of the Jews, I shall cole flie lect the Original of the Names given to GOD by them. Nor will it be much material, if, according to were antient Writers, they had many of their religious Rites from the Egyptians; for the antient Egyptian Language being grown quite obsolete, and their Religion totally abolished (only some Footsteps, which remain in the fragments of Authors, and a few Hi-

212. 圣赋。

aa

re

ea

it

I I

ch

ıg

on f i

on

A.f

In

0 ua vhi

hon

hat hef

ber

befe

us

ant

nor s S ins ;

Gods

be fo

and

nof

ron

Chr

eroglyphicks, which are preferved at Rome and fome other places) we do not think it worth the infifing on. It must be own'd, that after Deucalion's Deluge, and some others, by reason of the constant Serenity of their Air, the Egyptian Monuments did, for a long time, remain entire; but there being nothing now left, to which credit can be given; we shall proceed by observing, out of Sanchoniathon, that EL amongst the Hebrews, admitting it to be a Phenician Word (as fome would have it, for although they were great Enemies their Language was only distinguished by a Dialect) signified GOD, and was the Saturn of the Phenicians, if we may give credit to that place of Porphyry, mentioned by Eusebius, which I shall here infert, together with the opinion of the Learned Gerard Vossius. Saturn therefore, whom the Phenicians call Ifrael, and whom, after his Death, they translated into an Altar of that name, whilft he reigned among them, had an only Son by a Nymph of that Country, whele name was Anobret, whom he therefore call'd Jeoud; which at this time signifies an only Child, in the Phenician Language; when his Country was engaged in a most dangerous and bloody War, being attired in his Royal Robes, he Sacrificed this Son upon an Altar built for that very surpose.

Three things may be observed here: first that Is rael, the most antient King of the Phenicians, was the same with Saturn. Secondly, that Israel had an only Son, whom the Phenicians therefore call'd Feoul. Thirdly, that he was sacrificed by his Father. Now, from whence can this seem to have derived its original rather than, that Israel the Grandson is consounded with Abraham the Grandsather, who was commanded to sacrifice his only Son. Thus Gen. 22. I. Take thine only Son; where only in the Hebrew is febild which comes very near to the Phenician Feboual. So also in the Orphaics or Onomacritics, Abraham is call'd

all'd morogenie, only begorten, where Abraham and are are confounded, as Abraham and facob were beore. This in my opinion feems to approach very ear Truth, though I shall not enter into a dispute ith any one about it.

me

ifl.

m's

ant

id,

10-

We

hat

ici-

ley

di-

the

hat

n I

the

ni-

mf.

ng/t

bele

rich

an-

0145

Sa-

se.

1/-

the

on,

rd-

om

ra-

led

an-

I. Fe-

nd.

is il'd

I easily see what Objections may be raised; particurly, that it is not credible that the Phenicians ould take Israel for the Supreme God, that is, Moch or Saturn, who was the Father of a neighbourng Nation, for which they had fuch a mortal Averon as Sacred History testifies. Therefore that place f Eusebius seems to be corrupt, which was the occaon, of the Error, and for 'Ispan's, we ought to read a for those that use abbreviations often write 'IA, with small line drawn over it for 'soggin. But here was o fuch thing, because IL in the Phenecian Lanuage, fignifies the same as EL does in the Hebrew. vhich is one of the Ten names of GOD. But Sanboniathon, in the same book of Eusebius, tells us, hat they call'd him Saturn not Israel; the words are hele: When Cœlus (Heaven) took possession of his Faher's Kingdom, he married Tellus (the Earth) andhad bese Children by her; This who is called Saturn, Betyus and Dagon, who otherwise are called Sito and Atanta. Another place of Sanchoniathon there is yet more plain; The Companions of This, who is the same s Saturn, are called Elohim, as much as to say Saturniins; for 'Executhere, is nothing else but the Hebrew Elobim. Atterwards how Angels, Judges, and false Gods also, nay the Supreme and only GOD, came to be so called in the beginning of the books of Moses, and every where elfe in Scripture, every Boy knows. remember I had this hint in conversation with the most incomparable Hugo Grotius, now Ambassadour rom the most illustrious King of Sweden to his Most Christian Majesty; thus far Vossius. It is most certain ei

bti

itl

at

Be

it

etr

nd

00

al.

hi

th

be .

elic

he

erp

he

00 roffi

Cris

whi

ttri

blac

Hoft Wri

was man

Bace

ib.

certain that the Heathens, formerly facrificed only Sons unto Saturn but more particularly the Phenician as antient Authors affure us. Thus Sanchoniathon The Phenicians sacrificed their most beloved and only Son every year to Saturn: which Porphyrius confirms, lib. 1 de Abstin. ab esu Animal. See more in Vossius, page 264. Damascius also testifies that Saturn was called EL, BEL and BOLATHEN by the Phenicians and Syrians. Servius also shews that 'Ha, was the Sun. I those parts, fays he, they all worship the Sun, which in their language is called HEL, from whence come "HAID, but of this more at large when we come to treat of the names of the Sun and his Worship. Le this fuffice to have been hinted concerning the name EL, whose plural is ELIM, which signifies Angel alfo, Exod. 15. 12. and ELOHIM, whose singula is ELOAH. I shall only add that ELOHIM, by which name God is called, who in the beginning created the Heaven and the Earth, hath diverse ac ceptations you may fee many very different Interpretations of that text in Gordonius Scotus.

Let us now proceed to another name, Jehovah or Fab, for which I shall quote another entire place out of Vollius: Facchus comes from & Fab one o the names of GOD from whence is Halelu-ja, that is, Praise the Lord. The Heathens, in their Dances used to pronounce the holy name 7ab or 7ach very loud. It feems also they used the Tetragrammaton or word of four Letters ירוה, whether they founded it Fave or Jehave, as the Samaritans did, or not; the from whence I conjecture that 1266, in Epiphania Dion fignifies the same. But whether it ought to be pro-scrip nounced Jeheve, as Mercerus and Drusius think, of bazi Febouah, according to the Puncta Masoritica, is not my Sabl present business to dispute: Give me leave only to Apu. Saba fay, that there seems to be no great Absurdity in Saba their

n

291 bon

on

. 2

age

led

and I

ic

me

to

Le

me gel

1 la by

ing

acter

6 01

act

0 ot;

, 01

hei

eir Opinion, who derived the Greek word Bix. om their pronouncing the word min aloud; for, ith respect to the latter part of it, 'tis well known, at Vau is often changed into B; fo Varro in Greek Bassow, Virgilius Bipilio. But if you will not adit of Bacchus; 'Ida, certainly comes either from the etragammaton, or fab which we have in Exod. 28. nd often in the Pfalms. I could wish we had that ook of Labeo, out of which Macrobius lib. 1. Satural. cites this passage; Apollo Clarius being consulted thich of the Gods was called Fao spoke thus, Fao the Supreme God above all, Jupiter at the beginning of be Spring, and the Sun in Summer, but Jao is foft and elicate in the Autumn. Then Macrobius subjoins he Power of the Deity of this Oracle, and the Inerpretation of the Name, by which Liber Pater and he Sun is fignified by 'Ido, from Cornelius Labeo in his ook intituled, De Oraculo Apollonis Clarii. Toffius lib. II. cap. XIV. How the Expurgation of Crimes by certain Rites, especially the Vannus, of which mention is made in the Holy Scripture, was attributed by the Heathens to'Ida shall be said in its place. Now that the GOD of Sabaoth, that is, of Hofts (which is one of the names of GOD in Sacred that Writ) was the Liber or Bacchus of the Heathens, who ces was worshipped for the Sun, may be gather'd from ery many places, but particularly Aristophanes, who calls ton Bacchus or Liber always Zaccamor. So Didorus Siculus dec lib. 3. and Lucian in Deor. Cons. Harpocration on the word Saco, and Eustachius in the winsnow of pro-scription, Q. Nunnius Alexander dono dedit foui Sabbazio. Q. Nunnius Alexander presented it to Jupiter my Sabbazius; which in the antient Parchment MSS. of y to Apuleius is called Sabadius. In the Holy Rites of in Sabazius, a Snake was put into the bosom of those

vil

en Vt

As

b erj

atr

1.

na

be

lef

al

ix

nc

ba

An

271

ve

ve

171

be

ca

h

me Ier

Re

ma

pr de

na

m

Po

th

al

that were initiated, of which Arnobius lib. 5. fays, The sacred Rites and Ceremonies of Initation belonging to bim that is called Sabadius, may serve for a trial of the Truth, where a yellow Snake is put into the Bosom of those that are confecrated, and taken out again at their lower parts. Where Sabadius is the fame with Sabazius, as the learned Vossius thinks. So Julius Firmicus Maternus. Thoje that worship Jupiter Serpens when they are initiated draw a Snake through their bosom. That Snake to some was the Symbol of a Deity, to others of the World, and of Youth or Renovation casting its Skin; when it drew up its Tail and hid it under its Throat it fignified Time, and, according to Pierius, was put into Saturn's hand, and fo it denoted the Earth moving about the Sun. The Greeks and Romans were Strangers to the name of Sabazius, which other Nations took from the Egyptians or Syrians. Thus Cicero, They are new Gods and to be worshipped by watching whole nights. So Aristophanes, the most facetious of the Antient Comick Poets, is troubled that Sabazius and some other Gods, being esteemed Stangers must be turned out of the City. Sabazius comes from the Hebrew word NOV, which fignifies Warfare or an Army. Therefore I Sam. 5, Pfal, 24, 59. and elsewhere the GOD of Sabbath, that is, of Hosts or Armies, which is quite different from the Fewish Sabaoth, which signifies Rest; against the Opinion of Plutarch, who derives zaccaroy or Sabbathum from Sabbazius.

There is another celebrated name of GOD, used in Sacred Scripture, viz. Adonai. Psal. 24. Esa. 19. 4. it is derived from Adon which is Lord or Master; in which sense it is found in Plautus, where by Donni or Adoni, he understands my Lord or Master. Macrobius says that the Heathens meant the Sun by Adonis. If you look into the Religion of the Assyrians you to the bose

ys,

Wer

as

ter-

are ake

the

in;

der

eri.

Ro-

ich

ans.
d by

cehat

annes

24.

of

pi-

bum

fed

. 4.

in

onni

cro-

you

will

vill find that Adonis was the Sun; amongst whom. enus Atergatis and Adones were in high eftefteem. Vhich is the Opinion of the Phenicians now. For Natura-Its worshipped the upper Hemisphere of the Earth which we babit, under the name of Venus, and call'd the lower Proerpina. Upon which account the Affyrians or Phenicians stroduced her as a mournfulGoddes, because the Suns annu-Motion being through the twelve Signs of the Zodiack, f which six are accounted Superiour and six Inferiour; nd when he is in the Inferiour and makes the Days short. bey imagine the Goddess mourns for having lost him, who s detained by Proferpina, who, as we said before, is Godless of the Lower Homisphere and the Antipodes; and they all it the returning of Adonis, when the Sun hath past the ix inferiour Signs and begins to adorn our Hemisphere with ncrease of Light and Length of Days. They also say bat Adonis was killed by a Boar, because they make this Animal to be the Emblem of Winter, the Boar being rough and bairy, delights in most dirty places, and such as are covered with Hoar Frost. Therefore the Winter is, as it were, a Wound to the Sun, which diminishes both its Heat and Light to us, which upon both accounts is the occasion of be Death of Animals. Thus Macrobius. Adonis was called Gingras in the Phenician Language, which was the Name of a Pipe, because his Worshippers sung mournful Songs, of which mention is made Isa. 28. ler. 8. where the Hebrew Jug doth not fignifie a Reed or Pipe, but a Crane or Goofe; that Pipe being made of a Goofe pipe, whence Gingrine is the proper Expression for the Noise of a Goose. Hispanus Aldrete derives the Word Gingras from the Syriack Root Ghenag which fignifies to hunt, but this feems to be very much strained. In the Sacred Rites of Adonis the People were to whip themselves very severely, as if they were celebrating the Funerals of Adonis; they also shav'd their Heads as the Egyptians did to dead Apis:

pis; but if any of the Women would preserve their Hair, they were obliged to profitute themselves to Strangers for one day, and what proceeded from it was dedicated to Venus. After this day of Mourning was over they made a Bed for Venus and Adonis; and the next was a day of Rejoicing for Adonis's being restored to Life. See Lucian de Dea Syria, and Plus tarch in the Life of Alcibiades and Nicia. These Ho. ly Rites were called Adonia, of which it is very probable mention is made Ezech. 8. And he led me to the door of the Gate of the House of the Lord, which is to the North and there sat Women Lamenting for Thamur. Where by Thamur. St. Ferom understands Ado. nis; and Procopius also in Fos. 18. where he also says that Mars changes himself into Adonis; but Plutarch lib. 4. Symp. chap. 5. fays Adonis was Bacchus.

bi

he

u

h

h

Now, because Stars where worshipped under the names of Men, and Men under the names of Stars; Authors haved deliver'd themselves so very consusedly upon this point, that it will be difficult to determine what belong'd to the Stars and what to Men; which is of great importance to be observed, in reference to those things that are related concerning the Antient GODS, for the illucidating obscure Texts of of Scripture. For sometimes History passes from the GODS and their sacred Rites, to Men of the fame name, and fo on the contrary.

It is also a question, whether not only the Sun but Grain also may be meant by Adonis, for so much may be gather'd from his Sacred Rites, as is evident from Ammianus Marcellinus; The Women, according to the custom of their Country, used to lament when their expectation was frustrated in the first fruits, in a very doleful manner, as the Worshippers of Venus did in the Sacred Rites of Adonis, which mystically represents ripe Fruits. There were Gardens Sacred to Adonis, concerning which the

leir

to n it

ing

and

ing

Plu.

To-

ro.

the b is

ba.

Ado-

ays

arch

the

rs:

ifu-

ter-

en :

re-

ing

ure

pal-

201 but

nay

OM.

the

Eta-

an-

25 0

ere

nich

the

he Scholiast on the 15. Idyl. of Theocritus says, They sed to sow Bread Corn and Barley in some Gardens near e City, and called them the Gardens of Adonis. We ould bring other instances of these Gardens; but this suffice concerning the name Adonai, and its ecceptation by the Phenicians, who worshipped the un under it.

There are other Names of GOD deliver'd to us the holy Scriptures, and recorded by St. Jerom, s Schaddas, &c. for which confult the Commenta-

Thefe were the most folemn Names by which the lebrews called the Supreme God; which yet the leathens applied to the Sun, except Sabazius, as is vident from what has been faid before. Thus alhough the Hebrews worshipped a Deity superiour to he Sun under these very words, the Heathens did not nean the Sun nor any other Deity (unless they eeemed the Sun as the most eximious Representation f the Supreme God, and, as Plato calls it, his most sensible mage) but only worshipped the Supreme God himelf; which I am the more inclined to believe, in reard almost all the Antient Religion was Symbolial, and they do not only worship this thing, in hat, but one thing out of another. The Priefts eing always very careful and industrious, to he People totally at their Devoire, were exuisitely ingenious both to load the People with fuerstitious Forms and Ceremonies, and to Inrich hemfelves.

What some do affert, That the Hebrews had the bovementioned Names of GOD from the Heathens, eems to me very improbable, in regard almost all he Religious Worship of the Greeks and Romans came out of the East; though I do not deny but that some particular Rites were invented by their Priests. But

how-

however the matter was, it is very apparent that the facred Rites of the Hebrews and Gentiles; in most things differ'd very little, as will be very manifest from what follows.

And thus much concerning the Names of the Supreme God as EL, ELOHIM, JAH, JEHOVAH, SABAOTH and ADONAL; I proceed to the different Appellations of the Sun, used by the Heathers.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Worship of the Sun, and his several Names.

Hesiod, and the Antient Historians inform us that the Adoration of the Sun was both very Antient and Universal; for it being the general Opinion, that the Supreme God had made the Heavens the place of his Residence, (immortal things being most suitable to Immortality) the Heathers could not observe any thing there so conspicious, or which seem'd to them more worthy of Worship and Adoration.

Thus, not only in great Dangers and Difficulties but in their Prosperity also, they devoutly listed up their Eyes and Hands towards the Heavens; thicke they directed their Prayers, not knowing from whence else any good thing could proceed.

ip er

r)

d

B

01

n

Then they began to think it very incongruous that GOD, who required religious Worship to be paid him by all, should conceal himself from them. For this reason most of the Heathens esteem'd the Sun to be a GOD, and though not the Supreme, ye the very next to him, and his most noble and excellent Representative; although others were of pinion, That the whole World, being sull of GOD

at

f

u.

H,

if.

735, res.

ier.

US,

ient

ion,

lace

lita-

erve

d to

Ities

d up

itha

from ruou

to b

them

'd the

e, ye

id ex

ofo

GOD

Wa

as the most exact Image of him. Those who woripp'd the Sun instead of the Supreme God himself, id like those, who, when they come to the Court f some great Monarch, take the first person they is in a rich Habit for the King, and pay him that espect that is due only to Majesty it felf.

The Inca of Peru was much more in the right. ho being askt, whether he acknowledg'd any other eity, Superiour to the Sun? answer'd, I do not eem the Sun to be the Supreme GOD, but his Minister ly, who being carried round the Earth, doth perform his fill and Pleasure. A very ingenious Answer. For ow could that be esteemed Supreme by which all blunary things would be confumed and reduced to hes, if it were permitted to act without any reaint. The Sun was only a kind of fensible Reprentation of the Supreme God under which consideraon only the most Wise amongst the Heathens woripped him; knowing very well that GOD himself buld not be discerned in any one thing; Univer-I Nature it felf being infufficient to represent him cording to his excellent Dignity. It is not agreed hat the Figure of the San is, whether it be a tragon, Polygon, or (according to the common.onion) round; for if it be Angular, the Angles may bt be discernable by reason of the weakness of our ght, occasion'd by the remoteness of the Object; as ppens in square Towers, which at a distance will em to be round; but if (according to Anaximanr) it should be an hollow Furnace full of Fire, it ould yet feem to be protuberant, as Opticks plaindemonstrate.

But to pass by its Figure as uncertain, it may be oved by Mathematical Demonstration, that it is an indred fixty fix times, or according to some an indred and forty times, larger than this Globe of

Earth

Earth; and of fuch prodigious Swiftness that moves 1000000 miles in an hour; which is yet for much exceeded by the Velocity of the Firmament that in the space of 24 hours, which is its diurna motion, it goes 42. 208. 427. thouland paces: which fays Fran. Patricius, if a bird could perform, it would fly 1884 times round the whole Earth in an hour 31. ; in a minute. Lastly, it is so bright and splen did when it makes the Day, that not all the other Stars and all fublunary Fires amaffed together one body, would be any thing comparable to it fo Light and Heat. For these Reasons, and also be cause Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter wen occasioned by its Motion, from whence proceeds the Original and Decay of all Animals and Plants the Heathens efteemed it a Deity; but more espec ally the Egyptians, in whose Theology he is called The Sole God of Heaven, yet still they honoured the rest of the Stars with Divine Worship, though the paid the greatest to the Sun. The Egyptians calls him Ofiris; though, according to Plutarch, Of fignifies many other Heathenish Deities besides, ye most properly it is taken for him. See Macri lib. 1. Sat. c. 21. which is explained by Diodorus Sin lus, faying Helios, that is, Ofiris or the Sun first rule over the Egyptians, by the name of that Star in the Heavens. Thus Statius.

Whether with th' Athemonians we do call, Thee Rosy Titan; or the fruitful all Producing Oficis. r eg

he

or

D .

MS,

afs

fs

hi

Osiris, in the Egyptian Language signifies Many eye So he enlightens the World with many Rays, a cording to Diodorus Siculus lib. 1. The Egyptians al called the Sun Orus, who was worshipped at Helio

nt

na

ich

oul

ur

len

the

ri

t fo

be

ver

ede

nts

ped

He

d th

the

alle

Ofin

, y

асти

Sic

rule

n t

3 a

Telion

under the form of a Bull confectated to him, cald Mnevis. Games were inflituted here in honour fhim, where the Images of the GODS were cared in facred Horse-litters. Servius says these Fiures were small Images carried about bytheir Motion nd they were inspired with Phrophecy: to this that f Amos 5. 25. seems to hint Thou bast carried the abernacle of Moloch, which Tabernacles or Chariots ere drawn by Oxen, Horses or Asses, and somemes by Men themselves, and served instead of Temes. The Antient Ceremony used at the Adoration of the Sun was to extend the Thumb upright nd lay it upon the mouth, (this was also used in the Vorship of other GODS) then they turn'd their Boles round about, Authors tell us, the Romans torards the Right, and the Gauls towards the Left. The leathens antiently adored towards the Rifing Sun; ne Israelites on the contrary, turn'd themselves toards the West, at their Devotion; and the Chriians have reviv'd the former, turning to the East? he Egyptians also, call'd the Sun Typhon; of which its place.

The Phenicians also ador'd the Sun; where oberve, that Phenicia is a part of Syria, situate on the ea-side, and call'd Canaan in Scripture. Canaan egat Sidon, according to St. Jerom, from whom he City of Sidon had its Name; it was also the bound of the Canaanites. From Sidon, 'till you ome into Gerar, even to Gaza, 'till you enter ino Sidon; yet I cannot but own, with Arius Montans, that it was a Name common to 12 other Nations: whose Inhabitants, according to Herodotus, as'd over the Red-Sea, and dwelt on the Sea-coasts of Syria; but according to the latter Description of Pliny, the Phenicians were dispersed over Syria; thich I am the more curious in, because it is very probable, that religious Worship, after the Egyptians came from the Phenicians into the West; they also being esteem'd the Inventers of Letters, and Navigation into remote Parts. So Critias in Athenem says, Letters were the Invention of the Phenicians. Also Dionysius Alexandrinus:

D 2

In th' Inland Country dwell the Syrians; Next the Sea-shore are the Phenicians, Descended from the Erythean Blood, They first built Ships, Sail'd on the boist'rous Flood Traded with Nations Foreign and Remote, By Observation of the Stars being taught;
And to have Settlements near to the Seas, Joppa and Gaza were their Colonies:
Th' Elaian Towers in their Possession were, Pleasant Berytis, and the antient Tyre;
The Shores of Biblus, and the fertile Ground Of Sidon, for fine Rivers much Renown'd; Rich Tripolis, Orthosia the Fair, Marathus plentiful beyond compare.

Whom Festus Avienus, imitating, fays,

All those Coasts wash'd by the salt slowing Sea, Is call'd the Country of Phenicia; From the Red-Sea Men thither did remove, Shipping and Navigation to improve;
They first Discovery made of the Pole-Star, And Commerce had with Nations distant far.

0 pp

ire

ig

Nor will what Strabo relates seems strange in regard their Mariners more particularly observed the Worship of the Stars, and carried their Religion into far distant Regions; and trading all over the Mediterranean, and sometimes into the Ocean, they almost 1711

16

vi.

e su

Al

ood

n red the n in

r the

they

most totally subdu'd the Carthaginians and Iberians. trabo lays, The Phenicians, before Homer's time, had he best part of Spain and Africa, which they kept ill the Remans quite extirpated them. They us'd fet Pataici, whom they esteem'd Deities, on the tern of their Ships; but in what Form they were arv'd or painted, does not appear from Hesychius. ut Cartarius de Imag. Deor. fays, The Phenicians ave Representations of their GODS, without the igure of any Man or Animal. The Sun was also rorshipp'd by the Phenicians, under the Name of aal, or Bal; call'd Bel by the Affyrians: Thus ervine; It is evident, that the Assyrians worshipp'd aturn (which is the same as the Sun) and Juno; which eities the Africans worshipped afterwards. So that in eir Language, GOD is call'd Bal; and by the Affyrins Bel; which is Saturn and the Sun. Other places so might be quoted to this purpose. The Sun was also orshipp'd by the Phenicians and Arabians, and all'd Adon, Adonis, Adoneus or Gingras.

This Adoration of the Sun obtain'd in Judea for me time, 'till Fosiah reign'd, who destroy'd the lorses that the Kings of Juda had dedicated to the m, and burnt his Chariot with Fire. We come ow to the Mediterranean Syria; where, besides udea, is Comagene which contains Seleucia, Antioch, pamea, and Laodicea, (whence it is eall'd Tetrapolis) elo-Syria, or Cava-Syria. Here the Ammonites orshipp'd the Sun under the Name of Moloch; that Lord of the Universe, or Milcom; which is the OD of the Ammonites, Kings 11. 5, 7, and in evit. and the 2d of Kings; from which places it ppears, that Parents made their Children pass tro' the Fire, in Honour of Molech, yet not fo as to burnt alive, but, as fome will have it, that they light be cleans'd and purg'd; being led, or carry'd by the Priests, or even by their Command, by their own Parents, between two great Fires; where, Aben-Ezra is of Opinion they were burnt: which is grounded on 2 Kings 17. 31. Those of Sepharvaim burnt their Children in the Fire to Adammelech and Anammelech.

Nor will it fignifie any thing, that some take Molech for Priapus; for Priapus signifies the generative Power of the Sun; or that others will have Molech to be Mercury; for it is Melech, and not Malecb that fignifies a Meffenger; which is Mercury's Character. Moloch had an Image confifting of Seven apartments. In the first, they offer'd a little Ape; in the next, a Turtle; in the third, a Sheep; in the fourth, a Ram; in the fifth, a Calf; in the fixth, an Ox; and in the seventh, a Male Child, according to R. Simeon in falkut; and Paulus Fagin notes on the Caldee Paraphrase of Leviticus, Men were Sacrific'd in Honour of the Sun, tho' leffer Victims ferv'd other Deities; their cruel bloody Priests making them believe, that the Supreme GOD expected fuch noble Sacrifices. To this end, they perswaded Parents to destroy their own Children, in imitation of Saturn or Time, which destroys all things that come into the World; Minutius Felix, fays, this Custom obtain'd in some places of Africa. W. ST. 17 55 150

N F

h

rie

DO

and

for

Cal

but Eu

Ta

me

the

Cic

Sun

Cal for

Ac

In Syria, Epamea and Emissa, the Sun was worshipp'd, with Mercury and Mars; as may be collected from Julian's Hymn to the Sun: They call'd Him Elagabalus, or Alagabalus; which Word coming amongst the Romans, became Heliogabalus, the latter part being compos'd of the old Arabick Word Gabal, which signifies an Inventor or Builder; of Gebel, which signifies a Mountain: Priests were consecrated to him, as is evident from an antient Inscripie

11-

is

m

nd

ke

ve

10-ryis

tle

P:

the

ld,

rim

len

(Ter

ody

OD

hey

en,

all

elix,

ot

VOI-

col-

all'd

the

Vord

; 01

were tien

crip-

inscription: Sacerdos Solis Dei Elagabali. The Priest of the Sun, the GOD Elagabalus. Of which, Testes Avienus; Strictly devout to th' fiery Deity;

The lofty Libanus deth touch the Sky, Yet still their Temple with his Cedars vie:

The Sun was also worshipp'd in Syria-Palmyrena, to call'd from Palmyra, which the Hebrews call Thansur; This City was built by King Solomon, in which Vopiscus, in the Life of Aurelian, mentions,

That there was a Temple of the Sun.

the Washington was Having thus pass'd thro' Judea, Calo-Syria, Comarene and Selencia, the Learn'd Vossias goes into Melopotamia, Babylonia and Syria, where he observes that Syria was taken in so extensive a Sense by the Antients, that it comprehended all these Territories. Thus says Mela, Syria is vall'd Coele, Mesopotamia, Damascene, Adiabene, Babylonia, Judea and Sophene; Pliny writing of Syria, says, That formerly it was a very great Tratt of Land; for it was called Palestine, where it joins to Arabia, Judea and Coele; then Phenicia, and more inward, Damascene; but at this time, rather South-Babylon, and between Euphraces and Tygris, Mesopotamia, where it passes Taurus Sophene, on this side Comagene, heyond Armenia Adiabene, formerly call'd Assyria.

It is very plain, out of Herodotus, Trogus, and others, what part of Syria was antiently call'd Affyria. Cicero says, There were Caldeans in Judea. The Sun was call'd Belus, by the Affyrians, or Syrians and Caldeans, or Babylonians, not in an Historical Sense, for so Nimrod was called Belus; but in a Natural Acceptation, and so it signifies Universal Nature, but the Celestial more especially, and particularly that of the Sun. There is a fort of a precious Stone, which shining like the Sun, is call'd Oculus Beli, Pliny fays; The Oculus Beli being white, bas a black Pupil or Apple in it, whose Middle shines like Gold. This Stone was most Sacred to the GOD of the Allyrians. They also called the Sun Adad, as the Earth Atergatis. Macrobine fays, The Affyrians call the Supreme and greatest Deity they worship, Adad, which signifies One. Him they adore as the most Potent ; but they also have a Goddes, whom they name Atergatis. and they ascribe all Power to these Two, meaning the Sun and the Earth. He adds : There is a most Noble Image of Adad, darting down Rays, by which is shown. that the Celestial Influences are contain'd in the Sun-beams which are fent down upon the Earth. Then another very plendid Image of Atergatis, emitting Rays from every part upwards; to intimate, that whatever the Earth produces, is by the Power of the Rays She emits upwards. But whether this Adad be the GOD of whom mention is made, Josh. 66. 17. is a Question amongst the Learn'd; for which, confult Vollius.

D 4

Strabo tells us, that in Arabia they fet an Altar upon the top of the House, and burnt there Frankincense to the Sun every day. In the same place, fays Theophrastus, the Sabeans carry Myrch and Frankingenie to the Shrine of the Sun, which was esteem'd the most Sacred of all those that were about them, and was guarded by armed Arabians.

Baalpeor was also worshipped in Arabia, of whom mention is made in Sacred Writ: St. Ferom is of opinion, that he was Priapus; which if it be true, Priapus was mystically put for the Sun, according to Orpheus in his Quomacritics.

ote

h

V

nt

n

m

er

d no

e ra

m

te

d iti

un

ly

us

ld.

he

he

be

ut

is,

ble

n, ns

77

77 ds.

n-

p-

n-

e,

be

as

2-m

0-

e,

ng

Carrying a bright (hining Light thro' the World, Wherefore I call thee Phaneta and King Priapus.

alternative steem and stock of Macrobius, says Phaneta, was the Sun; and if riapus was the same as the Egyptian Horus, the Sun ras signified by it; thus Suidas, The Image of Pripus whom the Egyptians call Orus, is made of an humane Shape, holding a Sceptre in his Right hand, to dete that all that is dry (that is, the Earth) and the Sea, re shown by him: Also his Pudenda extended in his eft, because he causes hidden Seeds to appear publickly. Its Wings intimate the Celerity of his Motion; and the undness of his Dish, his circular Form, for they esteem in the same as the Sun.

There was another Priapus at Lampsacus, from hose corrupt History, some fabulous Relations are proceeded, which I have thought fit to omit.

is sufficient to my purpose, to prove that Priapus priently, mystically signified, either the Sun, or the suiversal Generative Power of Nature, into whose mbraces those Women that were about marrying, ere to be put for some time, that the God might ee them from their scrupulous Modesty.

The Inventions of the antient Priests, were not ally impious and soolish, but very obscene, settled of sordid; the Worshippers of the Idol Belphegor, mongst the Moabites, appear'd very nasty, amassing eat Heaps of Mud, and offer'd Dung instead of rankincense. The Moabites and Midianites had yet me Rites that were worse; for their Belphegor, to Priapus, being made with his Penis erect, they id the same Ceremonies as were in the Sacred lysteries of Venus, and openly indulg'd and peritted all sorts of Lust and Licentiousness: Thus in umb. 25. 12, 13. The Israelites being invited to the Sacrifices of Belphegor, were initiated into the Rites of this God, and committed Fornication with the Daughters of Moab. From the 2 King 25. 2. and 2 Chron. 15. 16. we may gather, that Mancha, the Mother of Asa, presided over these Rices; and St. Ferom on the 4th Chap. of Hofes, shews, that Women formerly were very prone to this Worship. Nor is it any Objection, that in the First Book of Athenens, Prispus is often called Bacebus; for it is very evident, that Bacebus or Liber, was mystically the Sun. As for Chamos, which St. Ferom fays, on Josh. 15. 2. was another Name for Belphegor, we need not infift upon him, because his Rites were very obscene, and relate little or nothing to our purpose. But we cannot omit remarking, that in Baifampfa, a City of Arabia, the Sun was univerfally worshipp'd; which besides what Steph. in Urb. fays, the very fignification of the Name, which is the House of the Sun, intimates.

The Sun was also esteem'd a Deiry amongst the Persians, who call'd him Mithrus. This is plain from Hesychius (and many others) who says, Mithrus signified the Sun with the Persians; which is consisted by Suidas, on the word Mithrus, and some antient Inscriptions, DEO SOLI INVICTO MITHR Æ: It the Omnipotent God Mithrus. And Herodotus give us an account of their way of Worship. Amongs all the Gods, they worship the Sun only, and Sucriful Horses. And Troyus, The Persians believed the Sun to be the only God, and Horses were Sucred to him: So Ovid. Faft.

Radiant Hyperion, Persians to appease Think the fleet Horse the only Sacrifice; No dull Victim with their swift God agrees. ee

A

th

Sil

7a

al

le

tr.

no

vh

he

On

lat

fe

ea, to

he

Li.

ich

me

ule

tle

0-bia.

de

the

the

'on gni-

ned

In-

7 ive

ong rifu

Sua

So

Bu

But what is here said of the only God ought rather be understood of the Supreme God; Thus Hespehius, sithras was the first Deity amongst the Persians; for the risans worshipped the Moon, Venus and the Elements, as shall be shewn hereaster. Now in regard to Sun was esteemed, most eminently to represent to Power and Majesty of the Supreme God, almost all

The Persians established two Principles of all ings, Oromozen, the Original of all Good; and rimanius of Evil; one like Jupiter, and the other jupiter: they worshipp'd the one, that he might estow his Benefits upon them; and the other, that might not hurt them: between these two they ac'd the Sun like an Arbitrator. That place in lutarch is very remarkable; Zoroastes, the most annut Philosopher, call'd one Oromasen, or Oromasden; and the other, Arimanius; and the middle one between the Mithras; which Mithras, the Persians call a Melator. He is also called Triple, either from Power, Vision and Goodness, or from Heat, Light and Instu-

The Persians kept a perpetual Fire in honour of dithras; as was also done by the Vestals at Rome. The Sun being esteem'd the Image of GOD; so was Fire the Image of the Sun: These Priests were all'd Pyrothi, who for an hour together, sung their lerses or Epodes before the Fire, holding Versain in their Hands, and cover'd with Veils anging down to their Cheeks and Lips; which trabo says, was done in the Temples of Anaitidos and Immon; the last signifying Fire, and so the Sun, and the former the Moon.

ce; for the Reason is equally agreeable in both.

The Persians, as was said before, sacrific'd a white Horse to him; which Herodotus, Lib. 1. says, he Massagetæ did; and Xenophon, Lib. 4. that the

Arme-

Armenians did also; which certainly was a much less barbarous Sacrifice than an Humane one. A precious Stone, call'd Mitrax, was dedicated to the Sun, which feems to rival Him in the Splendour of its Colour; and is found in Persia. St. Augustine, in his 201 Book, & Cap. contra Fauft. inveighs against Patriarchs of the Manichees, who, fays he, worshipp'd the Sun, as a middle Principle betwixt Good and Evil. Your Prayers (fays he) whirl about with the Sun's Motion. And Chap. 8. You are fo vain as to place the Power of our Saviour in the Sun; and Infinite Wildom in Light; which very much illustrates what was faid before concerning the Sun. But whether this Worship were Divine or Symbolical only, is the Queftion. A THE STATE

I am of Opinion with the Learn'd Vossius, that the Manichees as well as the Heathens, intended nothing but a Symbolical Worship, which terminated in the Supreme God. Neither do they seem to terminate their Worship in any of the most eminent Parts of Nature; but acknowledging one Supreme Operator in the whole Frame of Things, Him they more especially worshipp'd and ador'd. Thus worshipping that Noble Emblem of the Supreme God, the Sun, they still pay some more prosound Veneration to an unknown Deity, which they ador'd in his Works.

Hereafter we will shew how extensive the Worship of the Principles of Good and Evil grew, and make some Enquiry, whether the Fall of Adam were the Original Source and Cause of all this Evil; or whether it were the Serpent which Symbolically is the Devil.

All Christian Divines unanimously have Recourse thither for the Redemption of Mankind: I will also there examine what Evil really is; for that cannot

Ja

al

re

he

al

1471

he

ia

h

01 ea

er

ich

A

he

o

in nf

p'd

nd

t be ace

lom

aid

-10

16-

hat

10.

ed

er-

ent

mt

ey

01-

od,

ne-

in

01-

W,

A.

all

ich

rfe

al-

an-

100

be justly call'd Evil, which is made use of by he just, the secret Judgment of God, for the unishment of Sin; nor can the Will of Man, the ever so propente to Sin, be call'd simply Evil; or the the most vile Actions may be the Consequence, and proceed from thence, yet the Principle was not ill in it self; because by God's Affance, it may be determin'd to either side.

The Ethiopians worshipp'd the Sun also under the same of Assainus, whom the Greeks and Romans all'd the Ethiopian Jupiter; and Vossius says very acreeably, because in the East, and the People of he Neighbouring Countries to Africa, they did not all Jupiter, Uranius or Celius only, but Sol cum Celo, un and Heaven. Cinnamon, by the Custom of he Country, was Sacred to him; the manner of Sathering which, together with the Tricks and Cheats, the Priests, according to their usual Cuom, us'd in the same, may be seen in Theophr. L. 9.

In Cyrenaica also, but especially in Marmarica, thich is call'd the Holy Country of God, by Diodorus iculus, Lib. 17. And amongst the Ammonites it said there was a Temple of Ammon, in which new worshipped the Lybian Jove; by which they neant the Setting Sun, Macrob. Sat. 1. Ch. 21. The ybians esteemed the God Ammon to be the Setting Sun.

There was also another Temple of Hammon in deroë, an Island in the Nile, but much inferiour the former. This Deity was supposed to have ams Horns, from which that Animal (says Macrobius) as all its Strength and Power, as the Sun from its eams, others by the twisting of the Rams Horns, ems to intimate the Ambiguity of Hammon's Anvers, which, as uncertain as they were, they were neciently in very great Credit.

The

The Ethiopians also kept a Table for the Sun, concerning which, see Herodotus his Thalia. Philastratus, in the Life of Apollonius, Ch. 3. gives an Account of what Sacred Rites were Performed to the Sun and Memmon Eom, whose Statue spake a soon as the Sun Beam approached to his Mouth.

The Carthaginiam, that were a Colony of the Phonicians, worthipped the Sun, as is manifelt from that Place of Servins, before recited, of which Enning says, He used to Sacrifice young Children to his God. Piscenniam Festus tells us, That the Carthaginians of ser'd up Human Sacrifices, and when they were overcome by Agathocles King of Sicily, they thought their God was angry, and that they might be sure to render him propitions to them, they Sacrificed two Hundred of the Son of their Nobility. We have before proved that Suturn was the Sun. This is also confirmed by many other Authors, whence it appears, that this Improve and Barbarous Custom, obtained almost over the whole World; which Tiberins abrogated in Gallia and Africa.

Thus much concerning the Names and Worship of the Sun amongst the Western and Eastern Nations. But some amongst them were of another Opinion, if we can credit Mela, who says, The Atlantes a People in Africa, Cursed the Sun, both Rising and Setting, as being most incommodious to their Persons and Land. But this is nothing strange, for there was not any thing so ridiculous and absurd, but the Superstitions Villainy of the Priests could introduce When the Sun enters into the Sign Aries, it exhales very contagious Vapours, which are Evaporated when he enters into Leo, so that after a difficult Plague has raged all over Africa, and swept a way some Thousands, it entirely coases, and the become Healthy again.

The

ik

Su

In In an Ro

he

0

e

n

lee

th

Ad Bri

wh

ma

ign

yp

20 2

be ha

nin

ods

of.

Gol

pro-Son: Sa-

any mpi

DVC

Gal

rship

Vati

Opi

ntes

Set.

414

s not

uper

duce

t ex-

pora

a dil ept a

the

The

The Greeks and Romans also worshipped the Sun, inder different Names, but more especially that of apollo, of which more hereaster; upon which Account Macrobius had reason to say, That the different situes of the Sun gave Names to the Gods; who had very various Appellations in several Countries, yet to that they all had some certain and occult Researce to the Sun, as the same Author says, He is call'd Phybus, from his Splendor, and Apollo, which Platon Cratylus proves to be the Sun. Cicero also says, hat the Sun and Moon were both Deiries, and the Greeks called the one Apollo, and the other Diana; ikewise Julian in his Hymn to Apollo.

The Emperor Heliogabalus Built a Temple to the Sun in the Mons Palatinus at Rome, he being formerly me of his Priests in Syria. He brought hither the Type of the Great Mother, the Vestal Fire, the Paladium, Ancilia, and all the miraculous things in Rome, and endeavoured to transfer the Religion of the Fews and Samaritans and the Christian Worship o that Place; that his Priest might understand the secret Mysteries of all sorts of Religious Worship.

Antonius Varius also built a Temple for the Sun n Rome. His Sacred Rites were called Apollonaria, is those of the Moon Delia, some of which may be seen in Proclus's Chrestomathia in Photius. The sense is thus; They Crown a piece of Wood with Lawrel, and Adorn it with various Flowers, upon the Top is put a Brass Sphere, at which small ones hang; the Middle of t is Adorned with Purple Crowns, less than those which are on the very Top, the Lower part is Cloathed with Purple. By the Upper Sphere they Represent the Sun by which they mean Apollo, that under the Moon; the small Globes that hang about are the Stars, the Crowns signific his Annual Course, having three Hundred and Sixy parts. There were also solemn Games, called Apollinares.

nares, instituted in Honour of him; of which Cicero speaks in his Philippicks, Who never was Present at, or made any Ludi Apollinares, for the Welfare of him felf and the People of Rome.

Many other things might be faid concerning the Mystical Worship of the Sun; which will be Treated of more Naturally when we come to speak of Apollo's being the same as the Sun; let it here suffice to have shewn (as much as could be Collected from Authors) that the Worship of the Sun was very Antient and Universal, and continues amongst the Indians to this very day.

I shall add nothing now concerning the Books of Apollo that were kept in the Capitol, which the Priests either did, or pretended to consult in all difficult Affairs, Predicting what was to come from thence; intending to Treat particularly of the Sa-throught thought to a senter, and a first of the senter of about the maintenance of and of the market of the server was marked there were the little of the week to the said long to a Transport to the state of the second

"如文理"是是一个是一种的"文型"。在一个一个一种"文型"。 is all the same and and there will the same all employed to propose on the first the man such to the first state of the ages whereast gares out one carte tomat to all failed to

And the first of the second of 1 11 200

STORES IN SECURIOR OF THE ALL WAS

cred Books of the Antients.

CHAP.

of.

1

he

Vei

ort

th

no

up

G vbi

Hea

her

upi

hat

er ty

lac

1

101 nor

l. H

hen

Vat

lac

Lab

e m

7.

of

ne

all

m

2-

CHAP. V.

of the Names of the Planets, and their being Re-

N regard the knowledge of the Planets was either not very Antient or Universal amongst the Heahens, we have shewn that some of their Names vere reducible to the Sun; and first Saturn, the Name of which Planet agrees with the Sun, as we ormerly made appear out of Servius, Damascius, and thers, the flow Motion of that Planet being then unnown. Macrobius out of Homer and Cornificius proves fupiter to be the Sun, so does Philo Biblius out of Sanboniathon in Eusebius; They thought this God to be the on-Governour of Heaven, and called him Beel-samen, vhich, in the Phenician Language, signifies Lord of leaven, but in the Greek Jupiter. Notwithstanding, hey did not immediately worship the Sun as the upream God only, but as his Representative; fo hat the Sun was worshipped only Symbolically uner these Names; tho', as we said before, his diverty of Virtues gave occasion to the several Names hat were given him in different Times and laces.

Mars also was one of the Names of the Sun, amongst the more Antient Heathen Theologists an more especially Mars Sylvanus, so Cato Ch. 83. de l. R. calls him, whether it be from Sylva a Wood, satter, or San, which is the dregs of all the Elements, viz. the most gross Fire, Air, Earth and Vater; which is much Explained by this Place in sacrobius, This very Pan, whom they call Janus, in the labit you now see him, gives the more Discreet and Intelligent

ho

15 vit

vit

Civ

An

ha

Men

Phi

God

hie

nis

Mia

y,

Sen

stua

ate

uir

Cen

be

y pan

S

hai

hin

Star

re

othe

erta

f i

Evil

ery

telligent to understand that be is the Sun. The Arcadians worship bim, calling bim the Lord of JAN, not the Lord of the Wood, but meaning the Ruler over Universal, Substantial Matter. Also the Glosses of Philoxenu and Papias, make Sylvanus the fame as Pan; but more of this in Vollius, who in my Opinion feems to strain more to reduce Mars Sylvanus to Pan, than Pan to the Sun. For what Similitude is there between Man, the GOD of War, and the common Sustainer of the fubftantial Matter of all things? My Opinion therefore is, that Sylvanus (which is the Epithet gi ven to Mars by Cato) hath respect only to a Wood full of Trees; for when that Deity was not very Propitious, they were afraid that their Flocks should be Devour'd by the Martial Wolves, which always lay ready to catch them. Thus Horace, Lupos Martiales, &c. upon which Account Cato, in the fame Place, advises each of them to Sacrifice an Ox to Mars Sylvanus. For this most pious Person was o Opinion, that Mars the God of War, had Command over the very Wild Beafts themselves in the Woods; he also perswades them to offer up Sacrifices and Prayers to Mars, under this distinction, and gives a Form of them in his 41 Book.

From all which we have good Reason to conclude, that the Learned Vossius has not sufficiently proved Mars to have been formerly one of the Names of the Sun.

Vossius is also of opinion, that Mercury, who is called Stilbon by Cicero; Cyllenius Ignus, by Virgil and Communis Stella, or the common Star by Apuleius, was the Sun also: But this does not at all appear evident to me. What is alleged for Proof, either agrees with the Star so called, or to some Men that had the same Name; tho' I shall not deny but that Mercury had some sort of Reference to the Sun by a kind of Symbolical Virtue.

a Malig-

The Curious Searchers into the Secrets of Nature, and a great Esteem for the Power of this Star, and hought that he very readily inclined to Mens Prayers; that he was not only in League and Amity with other Stars, but with Men also; especially with respect to those things that relate to Study and Civil Affairs; according to whose influence, the Antients believ'd one Man to be more Sagacious han another.

d

7-

10

n.

ri-

nd

ntly

he

al.

nd

V as

ent

ees

ler-

ind

'he

The Emperour Julian was the greatest Adorer of Mercury of any that I read of amongst the Antient Philosophers; for as he esteemed the Sun the Supream God, so he was of opinion, that Mercury was his hief Minister and Companion, and Dispenser of is Virtues. Ammian. Lib. 16. Julian always rose at Midnight, and secretly put up his Supplication to Mercuy, whom Theology has discover'd to be the most swift sense of the World. After which he set himself close to study, and it is incredible with what Sagasity he investiated the knowledge of the most principal things, and acuiring as it were some more than ordinary Assistance, he scended to the most sublime, and successfully run through be most Nice Parts of Philosophy. This is Reported y Ammianus, one of Julian's Soldiers and Companions.

Some were of opinion, that Mercury had the charge of Souls after this Life; but because those things that are related Mystically concerning this Star, are confounded by the Antients, with those that are reported Historically, or Fabulously of some other Mercuries, we cannot Determine any thing certain concerning their secret Observations about to The Magicians had an extraordinary opinion of its Power, that it could easily produce Good or Evil, and redouble its influence; of which Star one tery wittily said, What may not a bad Companion do, if a Malignant Star can make a Man Wicked? But this

efi

ri

vh

n

Be:

er

Loo

o Sun fici

ou no

oth

he

11 tra

ou

Lun

4.

307

A

hip

5, f

Luri

Cast

1ec

Mot

ed

auf

he :

C

by the way.

Let me only observe, that Saturn and Jupiter did signifie the Sun and the Universal Nature; but I cannot think that Mars and Mercury did so, unless I see more convincing Arguments than I have his therto done. And so much for the Names and Worship of the Sun amongst the Antients; I will hereaster shew what Names it had common with Men that were Translated into Gods.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Worship of the Moon, and its different Names.

Ext after the Sun succeeded the Adoration of the Moon, as being supposed to preside over the Moist Principle of Generation, as the Sun does over the Warm. Pliny calls her, The Earths mol Familiar STAR, designed by Nature to prevent Dark mess. Its influence was esteemed the most Efficacious, because, by reason of its vicinity, it seems to act more forcibly upon the Earth and Water than any other Star. I shall not say any thing concerning the Magnitude, Distance and Phasis of this Planet, it being to be found elsewhere; I will only remark, that the most Learned Philosophers esteemed its fort of Earth as well as a Planet. Thus Orpheus, He contrived another infinite Earth which the Immortals cal Selene, but Mortals Meene; which hath many Mountains, Cities and Houses.

Of which Opinion were Thales, Pythagoras, Anax agoras, Heraclides and Ocellus, and also Heraclitus. It

U

j.

or-

af.

at

ent

o ot

loes

mol

ark.

is to

n a-

ning

net, nark,

it 2

, He

ls call

1oun-

Anax.

s very obvious that its Superficies is rough and un gual, to any that look intently on it without a Teescope: which the great Author of all things conrived that it might disperse more Light every where upon this inferiour Orb, for if it were smooth nd altogether plain, it would only reflect the Sun. Beams from one Point or Part, which the most Inenious Galileus has demonstrated, by Hanging a Looking-Glass against a smooth Wall, on which the Sun shines: and if it were round it would not cast o great a Light, for flat Looking-Glaffes exhibit the Sun to us much less than any others. The Supericies of the Moon and Earth, therefore were made rough and unequal, that they might Diffuse the more Light, and fo be mutually subservient to each other. For the Moon and Earth enlighten each oher reciprocally, in the Suns absence. The Influences of this Star are very great upon the Sea, and Il things that are Humid; and its effects are very trange upon the Brain it felf, the Citadel of the oul, so that those Distemper'd in Mind, are called Lunatick, as Matth. 4. 24. and he who in Matth. 17. 4. is called Lunatick, in Luke 9. 39. is called Denoniack: and Mark 9. 17. 25. Dumb and Deaf.

As in the East (from whence all Religious Worhip came) the Sun was called Baal, or Molech; that s, Lord or King; so the Moon, Baaltis or Queen if Heaven. The Poets, especially Eschylus and suripides, made her the Daughter of Jupiter. In the sast, and in Africa, she was called Celestial. There is CELESTIAL GODDESS upon an antient Medal of Julia Symiamira, who was a Syrian, and Mother to Heliogabalus. The Assyrians first worshiped her, under the Name of the Celestial Venus, as sausanias afferts in his Atticks; where he also says, he Phenicians and Greeks received it from them.

E 3

The

lit ay

ro

lit

n

wa

io

M

ne

ma tha

Webyle

4 1

70

it.

Fer

y

two rian

Na

ren

(ac

is v

a N

Pau

Stra as v

for

felv afte

Inv

The Learned Vollius fufficiently proves, that the Moon was that Celestial Venus, whom I refer you to. Aftarte was also the Name of the Moon amongst the Affyrians; whose Image, as that of Isis, was, a Woman with Cows Horns; which fignifies the Horns of the Moon. Aftarte was Aftaroth with the Jews, 2 Kings 23. 13. where Solomon is faid to have Built an House for Aftaroth, the Idol of the Sidonians. The Sep. tuagint Translate it Aftarte. The Figure was either all Fish, or part Human, part Fish; If Baaltie be the Moon in Dio, as it feems out of Sanchoniathon in Philo Biblius, Baaltis, being contracted into Beltis, fignifies Lord. So also the Prophet Feremy, according to the interpretation of Ferome, calls her Queen of Heaven, Chap. 7. 16. and Chap. 44. 17, 18, 19, 25. There was a Syrian Venus called Aftarte, Married to Adonis, according to Cicero; which it is very probable Elius Lampridius in the word Helio gabalus calls Salambo; Salaizein in Anacreon, fignifica to Mourn, which was the greatest part of the Sacred Rites of Adonis.

I cannot readily believe that this Aftarte was the Moon, but rather some Woman of that Name, whom Cicero, in the place before-mentioned, calls the Fourth Venus, and here I must beg leave to Dissens from the Learned Vessius. The Syrian Goddess, of Juno Assyria, which was at Hieropolis, may be stilled the Moon also, and so may Atergatis and Derceto, in a Natural consideration; of which more when we come to treat of the Worship of the Earth. The same Name, if not always, yet very often significant the Moon and Earth.

There was Mylitta amongst the Babylonians and Assyrians (whom Herodotus in his first Book makes a Goddess) and the Learned Vossius takes her to be Vossus Urania, and afterwards the Moon. But that Goddess

16

0,

ne

an

he

181

1le

p.

191

be bon

tis.

10 een

18, rte,

itis

elio

ifier

cred

the

nom

the

Tent

, 01

tiled

o, in

The

nifies

and

kes a

God-

des

ess was not Venus Urania, but another, called Aphrolite, according to Herodotus. Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. 2. ays, there were four Venus's, of whom this sprang rom the Froth of the Sea, and so was called Aphrolite, she had Cupid her second Son by Mercury; but n my opinion she was not the Moon, but rather a ascivious Woman deisied by the Greeks; as Flora was amongst the Romans. Her Religious Rites menioned there, and in the 2. Book, 6. Chap. of Valerius Maximus, are fufficient demonstrations of her Lewdness; so that Mylitta was no Celestial but a meer Aninal Deity; whose Temple was called Succoth Benoth, that is, The Tabernacle of the Daughters, where the Women went to meet their Lovers; which the Bahylonians, driving the Israelites out of Samaria, built, Kings 17, 30. Where Benoth is derived from Venus. or Venus from Benoth, as the Learned Selden will have it. Nor is Nebo one of the Names of the Moon, but of the Sun, if we may rely on the Authority of St. Ferome; who is of opinion that Nebo is the same Deiry as Chamos and Belphegor, of whom before.

It is most certain that the Sun and Moon were the two Chief Deities amongst the Babylonians and Assyrians; tho' they were worshipped under other Names, amongst which Venus Urania was the most remarkable; who had a very antient Temple, which (according to Herodotus) the Scytbians destroy'd. It is very uncertain whether Anitis or Anaitidos, were a Name of the Moon; tho' Plutareb in Artaxerxes, and Pausanias in Lacon. seem to savour this opinion; but Strabo says there was a Law amongst the Armenians, as well as the Medes and Persians, that their Virgins, for some considerable time, should prostitute themselves before the Goddess Anaitidos; and no Person afterwards resused to marry them; which obscene Invention of the Priests or Priestesses obtained else-

E 4

tio

A

Ve

M

th

litt fig Ve

Voj

W:

t

an

W

hi

h

Ve.

117

Pb

hij

e W

De

He e

ii

e

ho d

ve

d

where: for Herodotus fays, that fuch deformed Creatures sometimes would so unfortunately devote themselves to this Worship, as continued as good Virgins as they came thither, for two or three years afterwards. Agathias brings several testimonies to to prove that Anaitidos was the Apbrodite, who, as we fay, was not Venus Urania, but with the Learned Vol. fins are of Opinion, that Venus Urania Mystically fig. nified the Star Luna. Strabo lib. 12. amongst others tells us, that this fort of Worship was in such great request amongst the Persians, Babylonians, Medes, Parthians and Armenians, that in Zelitica, a Province of Armenia, which takes its Name from the City Zela, the Kings did not keep their Courts in Palaces, but in the Temples of the Perfian Gods: so that their Kings were Priefts, and who in all probability deliver'd the Virgins, that were dedicated to Venus, unto the Men; which fort of Custom, according to Garcilasso de Vega, in the History of the Inca's, seems still to obtain in Peru. You may see more concerning the Rites that were instituted in honour of A. naitidos, and of their Agreement with the Saturnalia in Vossius de Idololatria lib. 2. cap. 22.

The Arabians also worshipped the Moon, in imitation of the Eastern People; for the Religious Worship went under divers Names in the East, yet it had very little essential difference; for the Sun, Moon, and other Stars were universally adored. But I question very much whether the Arabians worshipped the Moon by the Name of Alitat, as the Learned Vosius thinks; for Venus Urania, which he takes to be the Moon, seems to me to be the Morning and Evening Star; which I shall prove by a Citation of his own out of Herod. who says of the Persians, that They offer Sacrifice to the Sun, Moon, Earth, Fire, Water and Wind; these were the first objects of their Adoration:

-

e

d

21 o

ve

g.

:15

at

es,

Ce

ty

la-

lat

ity

us,

to

ms

n-A.

in ta-

Or-

nad

oon,

ue-

ped

ned

be

enhis

that Wa-

oraion :

tion: afterwards they learned frrom the Assyrians and Arabians, to facrifice to Urania: The Affyrians call Venus Mylitta, the Arabians Alitta, and the Persians Mithras. There is nothing more evident, than that the word Selene fignifies the Moon, and that the Mylitta of the Assyrians, and the Alitta of the Arabians fignified Venus Urania. Therefore they esteemed Venus and the Moon to be different Deities; altho' Vossius will have Urania to be the Moon only, tho' it s taken for both; but perhaps he thought this Star was not fo well known, to have Adoration paid to it; but by his good leave, what Star is more bright and splendid than Venus in her opposition to the Sun? wherefore I am of opinion that the Arabians worhipped the Moon under this Denomination, tho' hey did not every where elfe; because Urania is Venus also; and perhaps likewise may signifie Forune, which Conjecture is grounded upon a place in Philastrius, There arose another Heresy in Judea; the worhipping a Queen, which they call the Fortune of Heaen, whom in Africa they call Celestial; of whose Worship I shall treat in its place.

What Vollius also offers concerning the Arabian Deity CIUN, feems to me to agree equally with Hesperus and the Moon. The Egyptians also worshiped the Moon, calling her Isis, according to Diodorus liculus and Plutarch: which, supposing it were true, et Is sometimes signifies that Moisture which is he Principle of Generation. Her Statue was hornd, to represent the Horns of the Moon; her Shoes vere made of Palm-leaves, in the same manner she described by the Greeks also; the Sacrifices offerd to her were Calves, for it was esteem'd impious o facrifice a Cow. Apis, called Epaphus by the reeks, was first consecrated to her. So Ammian. Marcell. lib. 22. Amongst those Animals that were an-

tiently

21

In.

fp li

A

T

T

fa

ac

W

F

7 th

2 hi

vio

T

R

De

the

it .

ral

of

Bu

lic

tho

lati

We

brated; Mnevis to the Sun, Apis to the Moon, &c. Apis is not any Ox, but such only as hath twenty-nine particular Marks. They report he was ingendred by Lightning, or the bright Rays of the Moon, and did deliver Oracles. When he was dead, they called him Serapis; but whether this is the same as the Hebrew Seraphim, is undetermined by Gesner. Eusselius out of Diodorus says, That Isis may be render'd Prisca, in Latin; the Moon being called so, as if she were always old, painting her with sour Horns. Her Sacred Rites are much the same as those of Bacchus, their Images being also alike, excepting the Forehead only. Wherefore Ovid says:

Adding but Horns a Bacchus thou wilt make.

According to Diodorus Siculus, Bacchus had Horns, Apuleius concerning these Rites says, As the Priests of Bacchus, in the Celebration of his Sacred Mysteries, ran up and down the Streets and Town like Mad-men, making a dismal noise with Cymbals and Instruments of Bras; so in the Feast of Isis or the Syrian Goddes, they cut their Arms and tear their Muscles with their Teeth, and received Presents of Braß and Silver, from many that brought them, striving to out-do each other in Liberality. Pausanias fays, the Inhabitants of Mount Citheron also worshipped His, in honour of whom they kept two Fairs every year. It is very probable that the Israelites worshipped the Golden Calf in imitation of the Egyptians. For when the Children of Ifrae entreated Aaron to make them GODS that should go before them, because they knew not what was become of Moles who brought them out of the Land of Egypt; Aaron Isid, Which of you bath any Gold? and e-

·c.

ne ed

nd

il-

u-'d

he

ns.

of

ns.

s of ran

eing

aß;

cut

that era-

the-

hey

that

tion

rael

ould

Was

and old?

and

and when they gave him it, he cast it into the fire,

I shall not here discourse of what fort of Adoration was paid the Ox in the feveral parts of the East Indies; it being more Methodical when I come to speak of their Religion in particular. The Africans likewise worshipped the Moon, for Herod. says, The Africans, in general sacrifice to the Sun and Moon only. The Greeks also worshipped her, calling her Artemis The Author of the Acts to the Apostles, Chap. 19. fays, Great is the Artemis of the Ephesians. She was adored by the Romans, under the Name of Diana, which by Syncope feems compounded of Dea, or Diva Jana. For Vossius says, As Janus was the Sun, so was Jana the Moon; but Janus is not always the same as the Sun, nor Diana the Moon; for there was a Fanus who reigned in Italy before Saturn, and taught them Agriculture; upon which account he was afterwards Deified, and Divine Honours decreed him.

That Diana and the Moon are not the same, is evident from these words of Dionysius Halicarnasseus: Tatius bad Tables Sacred to the Sun, Moon, Saturn, Rhea, Vesta, Vulcan, Diana, Quirinus and other Deities; and put those Sacred to Juno Quiritis into all the Courts, which remain there to this very day. Whence it appears, that the Moon and Diana were two several Goddesses; and likewise Diana and Juno, both of which Vossius would have to signific the Moon. But the each of these Goddesses, by a kind of Symbolical virtue, may seem to Quadrate with the Moon; yet I believe them originally to be as distinct, as those that were Animal Deities, and afterwards translated into the number of the Gods or Stars.

I readily acknowledge that Diana and the Moon were antiently worshipped for each other; but so was not Juno every where; tho' Vossius brings several very plausible Reasons for his opinion. He says that Ilythia was the Moon; but Homer says there were many Ilythia's, which presided over Women in Childbirth; wherefore it is more probable that it signified Juno Lucina, that took care of Women in Travel, and not Diana: tho' I do not deny but that, according to its various ways of Interpretation, it may in some measure seem to agree with Diana her self.

The Names of the Antient Gods were very much confounded, being the same as those given to the Stars and Moon; also when the Historians, Poets and Philosophers mentioned them, every one endeavour'd as much as they could to strain the different words of several Countries to their own sense: from whence it is, that their Writings, which are handed down to us (some being to be understood in a Genuine, and others in a Mystical or Symbolical sense, and others full of Poetical Licence) have so perplex'd and involv'd things, that it is very difficult for us in this Age, to make a nice and accurate disquisition into Truth. That Ceres was a Name for the Moon we may learn from Servius, upon the suff of Virgil's Georgicks:

Bacchus and Ceres, you the World's bright Eye, Who trace the gliding Year upon the Skie.

The Stoicks say there is only one God, and one and the same Power, to which we give different Names, according to the diversity of its Offices; so that they call the same Sol, Bacchus and Apollo; and Luna, Ceres, Juno and Proserpina.

But Servius is singular here in his opinion, that Juno was a Name for the Moon, besides Apuleius, who very improperly makes Diana, Juno, Venus and who

Ch

Bel

the ly,

Te

ent

on.

fort

tha

the

tha

cou

the

wei

fon

Ops

Mo

nias

ly c

Was Veni

pro

my

Fem

Mac

late

70 2

Bellona the same; in regard the Antients esteemed them different, both Genealogically and Historically, and also their Ornaments, Age, Habits, Images, Temples, several different ways of Worship, sufficiently prove it, which is unnecessary to insist further Now tho' these two Goddesses may in some fort feem to agree, fo that it was believ'd that they were both of equal Power, in averting fome Evils. that infested Mankind; yet Antiquity shews us that their Religious Rites, &c. vary so vastly different, that I cannot fee the least pretext for her being accounted the same with the Moon.

This will be more evident, when we confider that the Virtues of most of the Deities of the Antients were mixt; fo that Is sometimes signifies the Moon. fometimes the Passive Nature of things: Rhea and Ops, sometimes Diana, sometimes the Earth.

t

1

h

ts

1-

2-

::

re

bo

00 ve

ry

une

he

the

ing

ol,

and

hat

255 and ho

Concerning Rhea or Ops, who also is called the Mother of the Gods. See Ovid. de Ponto Eleg. 2.

At th' Mother Goddeß crooked Cornets Sound. The puplick Contributions do abound: Diana's Priests no such Supplies do crave, And yet they plentiful Subsistance have.

We find Suada to be a Name for Diana in Pausanias; Venus also is sometimes taken for the Moon, only on account of some Symbolical Virtue; but it was impossible for her to be called Juno, in regard Venus (as she is an Animal Deity) was esteemed propitious to Harlots, and Juno their declared Enemy; thus in Numa's Law, Let not an Harlot approach the Temple of Juno; but if she doth, let ber Sacrifice a Female Lamb, with her Hair hanging about her Shoulders. Macrobius fays, that the word Venus was but very late in use amongst the Romans; with which Varo agrees, affirming that it was neither Greek nor Latin, even in the time of the Roman Kings, which the Famous Mr. Selden confirms, deriving Venus from the Hebrew word Benet; the History of that Celebrated Harlot, together with the most obscene Rites, Life per

Bee

an wit

15,

Tac

Wa! Thr

wh

nes who inc

Ho

Wa

 Γh

as e

wh

n t

had

ind

Hor

Lef

wit

I

ior

Fro

Nai

of ?

nar

itan

coming out of the Eaft.

Neither did the antient Romans, under Romulm and Numa, admit of the Animal Gods of the Greeks, or any of their fabulous Stories, concerning Immortal Beings conversing with Mortals; as may be feen in Dion. Hal. Lib. 2. Proferpina also or Persephone doth Mystically signifie the Moon, but properly then, when the is under our Hemisphere: Thus Orphem, in the beginning of his Hymns or Onomacritics, invokes this Goddess thus; Thou Protracter of time, forerunner of Light, of most excellent Beauty, most splendid and Horned. And afterwards, The most Honourable Wife of Pluto; the most Celebrated Demon of Life: But this also is to be understood Mystically or Historically. Other Authors fay, she was Pluto's Wife, upon which account they Act ambiguously, sometimes worshipping a Man, under the Name of a Star, and fometimes a Star, under the Name of a Man.

Persephone and Ceres were esteemed to preside over the Manes or Ghosts, that is, Souls when they were departed out of their Bodies. Theocritus and Porphyrius both say that Proserpina was also called Melitode; Souls being very often called Melissi, or Bees by their Theologists, upon the account of that sweet Pleasure they enjoy when they are freed from the Body. See Porphyrius, Lib. de Nym. Ant. where, amongst other things, he says, the Moon is the Queen of Generation, and was antiently called Apis; Bees that were procreated from Oxen, were called Bugeni, which Name is also given to Souls going to Generation; but all Souls which were about the Act of Generation were not called Bees, but those only who had led a just Life

Life here, and where to return again after they had performed the Pleasure of the Gods: for the little Bee is an Animal that usually returns to its former place, and an Example of Justice and Tempeance; therefore Sober Sacrifices were performed with Hony.

n

5,

15,

[-

96 ne

n,

16,

n-

-9"

lid

ble

ut

al-

no

les

nd

rer

SIS

by-

le;

eir

eady.

0-ati-

-01

me

all

ere

iust ife

The Moon also, when she enlightens those under is, is called Libera, as the Sun Liber, fee Liv. Lib. 2. Tacit, 2. Annal. Macrob. Saturn. Chap. 14. Hecate was likewise the Moon; properly called Tendos or Three Ways. Hence in Varro Diana is called Trivia, ecause in Grecian Towns, she was set in a way where three Ways met? The Scholiast on Aristophanes fays, They Antiently worshipped Hecate, in Places where three Ways met, being called the Moon, Diana and Hecate. They provided a sumptuous Feast in Honour of her, and fet it in a place where three Ways met, on purpose for the Poor to carry away. The Sacred Rites were Performed without Howling. as others were, but with Hymns and Songs, for which purpose they chose Matrons, as Servius says n the Fourth Aneid.

As Hecate had three Faces, fo her Dog Cerberus had three Heads, Tib. Lib. 2. Who has three Tongues and as many Heads. That on the Right being an Horse's, the Middle that of a Savage Man, and the Left a Dog's. Hefiod makes him to have Fifty; and n the second Ode of Horace, he is called, The Beast with a hundred Heads.

Let this suffice concerning the various Appellaions of the Sun and Moon amongst the Heathers. from whence it is evident, that vast Variety of Names proceeded partly from the great Diversity of Virtues which were found in the two great Lumiparies beyond what was observable in the other tars, and partly from Men that were Translated into

TO AREA

wl of

be

Bo

ft

or

inc

Mi

oti

n vin

uic v ua av

opi N

pir cul

me

n. etle

id

rve

rna

pec

erl. Th

bug

p t

Mio

lus

into Stars, whilst Stars were worshipped under the notion of Men, and Men under the notion of Stars; so that all those Antient Heroes and Heroins, who either by reason of their own Merit, or the Flattery of the People, had some particular Heaven of Star ascribed to them, was the occasion that the Sun, Moon, and the other Stars had so many several Names; but the Sun and Moon more especially. Thus Diod. Sicul. lib. 1. The first Men contemplating, and with Astonishment admiring the World above them, and Universal Nature, were of opinion that the Gods were Eternal, but particularly the Sun and Moon, calling the surface Osiris, the other Isis, &c.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Adoration of the Five Planets.

OT only the Sun and Moon, but the other Stari also, were antiently Honoured and Worship. ed, some having the Preheminence before others That the Stars in general were worshipped, we learn from Plato in his Cratylus; where shewing what was the most Antient and Universal Religion, he fays, Those who first Inhabited Greece, in my opinion, feem to have accounted those Gods only, whom most of the Barbarians esteem Gods now, to wit, the Sun, Moon, Earth, Stars, Heaven, &c. and in his Timaus and de Legibas, The World is a Deity, and so are the Hear ven, Stars, Earth and Souls, &c. Xenocrates also will have the Planets, fixed Stars, Sun and Moon to be Gods Cleanthes, the World and Stars, of which Opinion were many Excellent Philosophers (as may be feet in Antient Authors) more especially, the Stoicks, who 1

78

be

ATI

ip.

ers.

we

on, ion,

100% and Hea-

will

ods

nion

feen icks

who

who faid, that Star was a Divine Body, composed of Etherial Matter, by which is to be understood Jupiter. Thus Ennius, Behold this sublime Brightness, be Jupiter which all invoke. St. Augustine in his first Book, de Civ. Dei, fays, That the Stoicks antiently esteemed the Stars, to be parts of Jupiter; whereore they not only attributed Life, but Intelligence nd Wildom to them. Philo calls them, most pure Minds, and Divine, and most beautiful Images. Aritotle goes somewhat further, the Stars (fays he) have n Etherial place, which being very Tenuious, always moing and growing, must necessarily have a Soul, and most uick Sense, and very swift Motion. For he thought very abfurd, That that which was the most adeuate cause of the Generation of Animals, should ave no Soul it felt; which opinion, feveral Philoophers hold to this day.

Many approved Christian Authors have been of opinion, that the Stars were endued with Life: paricularly Thomas Acquinas and others, of whom Vossius, a his Book de Idelalatr. gives us a Catalogue; tho ome mentioned there, were of the contrary opinion. The Learned Jesuit, in his Dissertation on Ariticle de Calo, says, That if they have Life, they may a worshipped with such an Adoration as may be aid to Saints: for those things that are above, derve greater Adoration than those below; also Ernal things, more than those that are Transitory; pecially amongst those, who after this Life, placed erlasting happiness in Heaven and the Stars.

The Antient Heathen Philosophers and Priests, ought it very fordid and indecorous, not to worp those things from whence they thought they deed their Original, and whither (by Divine Perssion) they believed their Souls were to return. Thus after the Sun and Moon, the other five Planets were Honour'd and Adored; the chief reason for which that the Learned gave, is in Tully, lib. 2. de Nat. Deor. The Motion of those sive Stars which are falsely called Erratick, is very admirable; for there is nothing Erratick, which eternally keeps the same Progression and Regression, and other constant and established Motions. But what is more admirable in these Stars, is, that sometimes they are hid, and then appear again; sometimes they preceed, and sometimes follow; sometimes they move slow, sometimes swift, and at sometimes motionless; from whose unequal Motions come the great Mathematical Years, which happen when the Sun, Moon, and the sive Erraticks, having performed their several Periodical Courses, come to their respective Situations. Thus Cicero.

F

ρ h

y Ie

ke

au th

a

I

nd

e.

en

no

me

a;

hav

hic

her

ami

Lu

שני

B.

ews

Th

tot

153

After the Sun and Moon, the bright Morning and Evening Star had the next greatest Adoration paid unto it, being the most conspicuous amongst the five Listors to the Sun (as they are called;) Thus Homer.

Hesperus the most glorious in the Etherial Orb. The Greeks called it Phosphorus, and the Latin, Lucifer, as the Moon is also called from the great Light she gives in the Night. Afterwards it was called Venus, being the Daughter of Calum and Dies, who had a Temple in Elis, according to Cicero, lib. 3. de Natur. Deor. For this Celestial Venus is neither Approdite, she that proceeded from the Froth of the Sea, on whom Mercury begat Cupid; nor she that was the Daughter of Jupiter and Dione, and afterwards Married to Vulcan; by whom Mars had Anteros; nor her Born in Syria and Tyre, who is called Astarte, and is faid to Marry Adonis: who had a Statue in Mount Libanus, at Macrobius says, her Head veiled, a forrowful Countenance, holding her Cloaths with her Left Hand, looking as if she wept. Nothing could be more agreeably invented, than that she should proceed from Calum and Dies, sometimes preceeding, fometimes following the Day.

The other Names of Venus have nothing scarce hat Symbollically agrees with our Phosphorus; tho't must be acknowledged that Aphrodite is very ofen used by the Antients to signifie this Star.

There was also Venus Lubentina, of which Ciceros, b. 2. de Nat. Deor. speaks: and another Venus Libenina, mentioned by Plutarch, who also calls her spitymbia, who had a small Statue at Delphos; to show when they Sacrifice, as the same Author, sys, They call the Ghosts of the Departed out of Iell, if we may believe him.

1,

.

3, br

id

ve

er.

, 25

ves

ing

meor.

hat

om

nter

to

orn

faid

Liba-

wful

Left

d be pro-

ling,

The

It was the General opinion, that as Venns presided ver the generation of Man, so she did at his Death kewise: but I take that Venus te be the same that aufanias reckons amongst the Parca, to whom the thenians Dedicated a Statue: Venus Calestis or Uraa the Daughter of this Venus or Parca; which, cording to Plato, mystically signifies Divine Loves There was also Venus Victrix, Venus Barbata nd Venus Calva, of which you'll find more amongst e Antients. Dion. Halitarn. and others mention emples of Venus in Thrace, Zacynthus, Paphos, Romes nongst the Leucadians and People of Actium. The me Author speaks of the Treasures of Venus Libia; of which more when I come to Juno Lucinas have formally spoke of that obscene Rite of Venils; hich is called Mylitta; Firmicus has added several hers, but they are so very fordid and filthy, that am ashamed to repeat his words.

Lucifer was also sacred to Venus amongst the Hews; as may be gathered from the Targums off h. 14. 12: and others, as the Learned Vossins

ews.

The Ismaelites anciently worshipped Venus; stont tom the Baracens had it, as Euthymius Zigabenus 18, which they continued till the time of Cesar

Fż

Heraclius i

Heraclius; calling that Star in their own Language, Chabar or Great; and the Mahometans imitate them, calling the Star Venus Cubar, which comes from Cabin in the Hebrew, and fignifies great and strong, so Vossius adds the Saracen Prayer, out of Cedrenus. Alla, Alla, oua, Kubar, which he Expounds, God, God, greater Egg, great Cubar, viz. Luna and Venus: but the great Selden with Vossius, fays, Cedrenus is mistaken about one, it being only a Copula, and the fense according to them is, God, God, and that great Goddess. But Eutbymi. us, in my opinion, has given a better Interpretation than any of them, God, God the greater, and the great Goddess; the word greater which is omitted by them, being inferted by him, which makes the fense much clearer; that tho' the Saracens invoked the Star Cubar by the Title of Great; yet they ac knowledged a greater Alla, or God. St. Ferom al. fo, in the Life of St. Hilarion, fays, That the Saracen worshipped Venus or Lucifer, who, as the Mahome tans now do, ended their Week at Friday, which they call Giume, i. e. Sunaxis, they also swear by Venus which they call the running Bright Star; by which they believe every Soul will find all his Action written down. I shall not determine whether the place of Amos Ch. 5. 26. But you have born the Tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun, your Image the Star of your God, refers to this; tho' Cochia here, according to St. Ferom, is Venus, Lucifer or B neth; but it is a question whether Siccuth be the sam with Succoth; I shall conclude, nothing but leave to those that are more accurately skilful in the Hebra Tongue. The Writer of the Indian History, tel us, that the Worship of Lucifer came at last to the Inhabitants of Peru.

S

m

cu

M

nei

Dn

he

ng

ou

belo

atio

ons

of th

Emp

by le

hibit

Tha

Mer

And

whic.

N

I might add many other things concerning the Star Venus; as that she Increases and Decreases in the Moon, and she is in her Full when she is most remote from the Earth; and Horned when she is retrograde and next the Earth; that she suffers an an Eclipse as the Moon does; tho' this is not the sole property of either of them, and is common to Mercury, and the latter to Jupiter also, as the Learned Mersennius in Gen. c. 1. ver. 19. says, he observed by a Telescope. So Varro in St. Augustine, de Civit. Dei l. 2. c. 8. says, Castor wrote, That there was such a Prodigy in Heaven, as that the Star Venus changed its Colour, Magnitude, Figure and Course, which never happen'd before, nor since.

But these things being little to our purpose, which is only to shew what was the most Antient and Universal Religion, I proceed to Treat of Mercury and his Worship.

e,

n,

bir

lus

la, ter

eat

ma,

to

mi-

ion

tha

tted

the

oked

y ac-

ma-

acens

bome.

v hich

Venus,

which

Ction

r tha

rn th

magu

Cochia

or Be

e fam

eavel

Hebra

y, tell

toth

ing th

afes lik

Mercury, next after Venus, being the most conspicuous Star. For (as Vossius has justly observed) Mars, Jupiter and Saturn, being above the Sun, have neither Evening Emersion, nor Morning Occultation; and on the contrary the Moon, that is under the Sun, has neither Morning Emersion, nor Evening Occultation; Mercury and Venus who move round the Sun, are half their time above, and half below him, and so have both Emersion and Occultation; therefore they began with these Companions of the Sun, and then proceeded to the Worship of the rest of the Planets.

We have formerly faid, what an high efteem the Emperor Julian had for it; nor did Porphyry pay any less Veneration to it. Mercury is called the Exhibitor, and Representer of Reason and Discourse. That Logos (says Porphyry) in the Sun is properly Mercury; the other in the Moon, is called Hecate. And adds, That the Compound word, is Ermo-Pan, which consists of a Grecian and Egyptian Deity.

F 3

Apuleius

Apuleius speaking of the Egyptians, says, There was Anubis, whom they called Mercury; and feigned to have a Dogs-Head, to denote to us, that we derive our Sagacity from him. But Diod. Siculus is of another opinion, whom if you please consult.

This Star seems to be the first worshipped in the East, especially by the Babylonians, who called it Secher, as Hesychius informs us; Mertholis, and afterwards Margenab, were other Names for it amongs the Eastern People. The Egyptians called him Thom or Theut, as we find in Cicero, 1. 3. de N. D. By the Greeks, Hermes and Stilbon, as we said before; and by the Romans, Mercurius: what a great Veneration they had for him, may be seen in Seneca de Benef. c. 7. where he says, That Mercury was the Disposer of Reasons, Numbers, Order and Knowledge. His Magnitude is but small in Proportion to the Earth, being as 19 to 1, as Venus is 6 to 1, but his Influence is very Powerful.

The Antient Heathens attributed very great Virtues and natural Mysteries to these two inseparable Companions of the Sun. It is my opinion that the Mercury which Cesar says was had in so much Veneration amongst the Gauls, was an Animal Deity, althor what is related of him, may symbolically agree with the Star Mercury; and the rather because their Worship was not much different from other Nations, as Cesar shews. It was certainly he that invented Traffick, and Commerce, and presided over the High-ways; it being customary to lay a great heap of Stones before his Statue; which was placed where three Ways met, and to put the sins Fruits there, for the benefit of Travellers. To this

1

t

B

t

λ

H

th

an

to

A

of

m

ea

F

Solomom alludes, Prov. 26. 8.

But this Invention of the Priests, proved very beneficial; for by this means the ways were clear-

45

UE

0-

he

it

er.

gf

By re;

ne. a de

Dif-

His

irth,

In-

Vir-

able

the

ene-

, al-

y acaule

other

that fided

lay a

1 Was

e firth

o this very clear-

ed

ed from Stones: and if all their other Rites and Ceremonies, had been equally useful, they would not have abused the ignorant Multitude as they did, This Custom of heaping Stones, obtained amongst the Indians, Arabians, and Saracens, and is still practised by the Mahometans, as Vossius observes, unless perhaps they paid this Honour, or somewhat like it to Venus, as Vincentius, in Hist. de Bell. Spec. tells us, of Mercury's Rod; with which, as Virgil says,

And others sends within Tartarian Walls.

Macrobius, lib. 1. Sat. fays, by Mercury was understood the Sun, upon the account of some Symbolical Virtue: For the fame reason Cartarius proves that Hercules was the same Deity as Mercury, tho' he were an Animal one, Dion. Hal. lib. 1. most Excellently explains the opinion of the Antient Philosophers concerning Heroes being Translated into Gods; There is a certain middle Nature between the Gods and Mortals, which constitute a kind of Damons ; sometimes conversing with Men, sometimes with the Gods. But Cicero, lib. 3. de N. D. very ingeniously exposes these Fictions; What? do you allow Apollo, Vulcan, Mercury, and the rest to be Gods; and dispute it with Hercules, Æsculapius, Bacchus, Castor and Pollux, these have as great Adoration paid unto them as the others, and some pay them a great deal more. Are these therefore to be esteemed Gods, Born of Mortal Mothers? What is Aristaus, the Son of Apollo, the Inventor of the Culture of the Olive; Theseus the Son of Neptune, and many more, whose Fathers were not Gods; Why are they ranked amongst that number? Why not they, whose Mothers were Goddesses? the Reason is the stronger, in my Opinion; For as in the Civil Law, he whose Mother is free, is Born Born Free; so by the Law of Nature, he whose Mother is a Goddess, must be a God. Therefore in the Island of Astypalea, Achilles is most religiously Adored; and if he he a God, so are Orpheus and Rhesus, their Mothers being Muses; unless perhaps Maritime Marriages have the Preference to Inland. Mercury was called Wodam by the Germans, and according to some Teu-tates and Irmenfal.

Divine Worship was also paid to the Star Mars, but long after the Sun, Moon, Venus and Mercury, for Mars was not known very foon; for tho' by a kind of Divarication of his Light, and by his trembling Motion, he Exhibited fome Indications of himfelf to the World, yet in the first Ages, there were no fuch accurate Observations of the Stars, that the course of Mars, Jupiter and Saturn were generally known. Therefore Names formerly given to Men, were applied to the Stars, when they were discover'd and known; fo that the whole Story of Anor Mystical, but meerly Human and Fabulous; or if there were any thing in it Religious, or Mysterious, it certainly had respect to the Sun, and not to these Planets, as is generally thought. For the Religion or Flattery of the Antients was so prevalent, that they bestowed the Names of Stars on their Heroes; and fometimes confer'd the Names of their Heroes on the Stars. I do not deny but that these Stars were known and worshipped before the time of Saturn, Jupiter and Mars; but it was under other Names, nor is it probable that the Star that was first observed after the Death of any Hero, took his Name.

ha

no

d

Da

pi

d

h

This Star was called Thorras by the Babylonians, which was the Name of the King that succeeded Ninus; but I shall not undertake to determine, whether from the Star. The Greeks called him Ares, and according to some Purois. By the Romans he was called Mars, Quod magna Vortat; the Poets called him Mavors; amongst the Sabins, Mamers, and Hesus by the Germans: Thus Lucan, Terrible Hesus with Cruel Altars; for the Antient Germans facrificed their Prisoners of War to him. So Procopins; Their greatest Sacrifice, is the first Man they take in Battel: whom they Sacrifice to Mars, esteeming him the greatest God. This most Cruel and absurd Opinion, extreamly prevailing amongst the Antient Heathens, that none but Human Sacrifices could be acceptable to the Supream God.

27

of 0-es

bs

14-

rs,

10

a

m-

mere

he len,

CO-

In-

ous

10 eri-

Re-

ent,

heir

rele

ime

ther

first

his

ians,

eded

ther

There were many different Mars's; but he faid to be Born in Thrace, was the Principal: of whose Original, this merry Story is told; Juno envying fupiter, because he had a Daughter without her Asistance, which was Mineron: She also was resolved to have a Son without him, who was Mars: They had an Oracle of his amongst them, according to Herod, lib. 7. as had the Egyptians also, lib. 2. where Divinations were so deliver'd, that they could not be discover'd to be the Contrivances of Men, out the Pleasure of the Gods. This was managed by the crafty Contrivance of the Priests; for when they would Predict any thing from Natural laufes that were unknown to the common People, or when they had any private Intelligence from their pies abroad, when they divulged it to them, they retended that it was a thing not of their own Knowedge, but Communicated to them by the Gods, hat they were Familiar and Conversant with; by which they acquir'd Reputation and Riches, as beg the only Persons that were Privy to those Secret Tyfteries. So likewise, if they Cured any Person

te

d

n

to

D

01

0

E

W

Si

as

CC

E

ly

M

by

m

th

th

to

di

A

A

E

J.

th

all

his

eft

giv

(fa

the

but

of a Distemper, they attributed it wholly to the Propitiousness of their God, reckoning it greater Honour to be thought to have Recover'd People by their Prayers, than by the most regular Administration stration of Medicines.

To this end also (as Herod. says) the Oracles of Apollo, Minerwa, Diana, Mars and Jupiter, but especially Latona, were set up; but these Pij fraudes did so much abound in all Ages, that it would be endless to insist on them, Herod. lib. 4. says, that the Scythians called Begij, worshipped Mars more particularly, the Vesta was their chief Deity; who in their Language is called Tabiti, Jupiter Papeus, the Earth Apia, Apollo Erasyrus, Venus Cælestis Artempasa, Neptune Thamimasades, yet they did not think they ought to Erect Statues, and Build Altars and Temples, but to Mars only.

The Lacedemonians, according to Pausanias, had another Custom, to Bind his Statue very fast, supposing thereby to keep the God of War secure amongst themselves; which the Romans also are Reported to have done to some of their Gods, especially the Tutelar, the Priests standing conceal'd behind, and making them seem to threaten to go out of such a City, whither a Voice unknown seemed to call them.

They formerly Sacrificed the Horse that won the Race to him; amongst Animals, the Wolf and Dog were Sacred to him; of Birds, the Vulture and Pelican, from thence called Martial; and according to some the Cock, into which the Soldier Alectric was changed, because he did not carefully Perform his Duty on his Watch, when Mars and Venus lay together. Those that are desirous to know more of his Sacred Rites, may consult Herodotus, concerning the solemn Festivals that were Celebrated

he

-11

10

he

ſa,

ey

m.

nad

up-

2.

Re-

eci-

be-

out ned

the

Dog

Peg to

Was

n his

tonore

con-

ebrated ted in Honour of him at Paprimides, a Town in Egypt. fupiter is also called Martial, or Areios by some, delighting in the same attribute as that which signifies the Lord of Hosts. The Proportion of Mars to the Earth, is 13 to 1; he is esteemed Hot and Dry, either on account of his own proper Nature; or because he goes or passes through the very Orb of the Sun; for he is 1176 Semi-diameters of the Earth diffant from us when he is nearest, and 8232 when most remote; so that in a small time, that Star that is Superior to the Sun, is feen under him, as the most accurate Astronomers observe; which could not be, if Mars did not pass through, and Emerge out of the vast Orb of the Sun very quickly; see Kepler and Scheiner, concerning the Star Jupiter also was much Honour'd and Ador'd Mars. by the Antients, persuming it consisted of such a mixt Temperament, as that it was as a mean between the raging Heat of Mars and Saturn's Cold, and fo thought its Influence very benign: Its Proportion to the Globe of the Earth, is 14 to 1, its greatest distant from the Centre of the Earth, according to Astronomers 12171, and the least 8232. But the Antient Philosophers meant some thing far more Excellent than this Star, or any Animal Deity by fupiter.

Orpheus calls Jupiter the first and last of all things, that existed before all Time, and will remain after all things that are to come; that he Inhabits the highest part of the World, and extends to the lowest, and that his whole is every where. But Seneca give us the best Description of Jupiter; Wise Men (says he) took him not for Jupiter, that is to be seen in the Capitol, or any other Temples arm'd with Thunder, but rather esteemed him a Mind and Soul, that Preserves and Administers all things; who made this Universe, and governs it by his Nod; and therefore many Divine Names are given him. He may justly be called Fate, from n hom the Order of all things, in an apt Series of Causes depends. Likewise Providence, who Provides and takes Care that they tend to the end for which they were designed, in a perpetual uninterrupted Course. Also Nature for all things sprung from him, and by him every thing that has Life, Lives. He may also be called the World: He is whatsoever is to be seen; self-existent, encompasses all things, and fills the Universe with his Divinity. This also Explains the opinion of the Stoicks, that the World is God.

0

n

C

b

e

ti

P

fe

CC

it

fr

en

Ita

afi

Go

is

On

ter

ma

Pri

ing

the

no

rat

ma

OW

fol

The word Jupiter feems to be derived from Jao, or fab, as was said before; for the latter part signifies only Father, as Diespiter in Varro for the Sun, because he is the Father of the Day. So Horace, I Car. Od. 24. Diespiter igne corusco nubila dividens. ther of the Day, separating the Clouds with bright shining Fire. Not only Strabo, whom I mentioned before, but a place in Origen, according to Sandford's Emendation, fays, Jao is called Jah by the Hebrews; which being joyned together, compose the word Jehovah, as' Isidorus will have it, lib. 7. cap. 1. Philo Biblius makes mention of Fevo, a God amongst the Phenicians. But for the various Pronunciations of this word, according to the different power of Letters and Languages, and how the Tetragrammaton is derived from it; and in what it agrees with, Jacobus, Bacchus and Evius, fee the Learned Sandford, De descensu Dei ad inferos. I shall enlarge upon this hereafter, it not being my intent here to Treat of those Men that were called Jupiter and Deified, but only of the Adoration of the Planet of that Name.

It was the Opinion of the Antients, that this Benign Star, in Conjunction with Venus, did make the

t

a

3

).

-

15

10,

11-

27.

a-

ing

re,

en-

ich

ab,

lius

eni-

this

ters

n is bus,

De

ere-

rofe

only

Be-

the

Air

Air Calm and Temeprate, and laid Storms and Tempests. In short he was not only esteem'd Universally Salutiferous, but of such Esticacy, that if the Moon and he were in Conjunction in the Dragons Head, we might obtain what whatsoever we ask'd of God; and Petrus Aponensis writes, he himself found this true.

Amongst the Planets that were antiently Adored, Saturn only remains to be discoursed of; for I shall not meddle with the Stars of the Medici (as Galileus calls them) or Bourbon, or any other discover'd by the affiftance of the Telescope. The Proportion of this Star to this Globe of Earth is as 22 to 1, his nearest distance from the Earth, is 12171 Semi-diameters, and greatest 17571. The Chaldeans and Egyptians knew that this was the most remote of all the Planets, and that though his Motion in appearance feem'd to be the flowest, finishing his Periodical course in little less than thirty Years; yet in reality it was the most swift, by reason of its vast distance from the Earth. You must consult the most Antient Authors about that Saturn, who Reigned in Italy, in whose time the Golden Age was, and who afterwards was Translated into the number of the Gods; for before his time there is no History which is perspicuous and intelligible, and can be depended The reason why in his time and some Ages after, there remained no Footsteps of Truth that we may fafely trust to, is, because then, not only the Priests, but Philosophers also wrapp'd their Learning (fuch as it was) in fabulous Mysteries. Tho' their opinions were very fecret and obscure: I do not from thence conclude that they were true, but rather think they dress'd them after that Extravagant manner, to make them relish the better; yet I must own that many of them will admit of a found and folid Explanation. Thus Thus, when the Poets relate that Saturn was bound by Fugiter, and cast Head-long in Tartarus or Hell; Mythologists understand, that the Malignant influence of Saturn is restrained and corrected by the Benignity of Jupiter; and that the vast expanded height of Air where these Operations are Originally Perform'd, is this Tartarus or Hell. Saturn was by the Plantonists esteem'd the Author of Contemplation, because being next Heaven, he infus'd that power into the Soul, and also by this means he recalled them to their first Original, therefore Sedentary Persons were antiently accounted the wisest. Thus Varro, lib. 2. de R. R. cap. 2. fays, A Roman Conquers Sitting. Therefore Pythagoras and Numa both commanded; That Men (hould Worship Sitting. 2 Sam. c. 7. v. 8. King David went in and fat before the Lord.

Saturn being Dry and Cold, was esteemed to Predominate over those that are afflicted with Melancholy and Black Choler, and when he is Superiour to the rest of the Planets in a Nativity, that he influenced and governed them. That he prefided over Autumn; and the feventh Day of the Week; upon which account our Roger Bacon writes, that we ought to forbear Work then, according to the Custom of the Jews, because the dull and slow Star Saturn was unfortunate, and by his influence, render'd Men unfit for bufiness; and also being the cause of the Eighth Month Birth, he was not esteem'd Lively and Healthful; tho others attribute the cause of those Rirths to the Moon. For the Harmonical proportion of the Planets, after Pythagoras, con-Jule Kepler.

I might here treat of those Planets that are small Satellites of the greater, especially in regard Pavori-

hat

Ch

tha

and are nio

Pla

by

Bu

per

tur

or t

For

the

ioi

attr

be i

Co

no

he eir

egi

nai

elv

all

A

ee

ha!

em

that those Stars that are generally called Erratick, and Nigidius calls Errones, are no more than they are commonly accounted to be; for he was of Opinion that it was possible, that there might be other Planets tho' we could not discern them, either by reason of their extraordinary Splendor or Height. But I shall proceed in the Prosecution of my proper Argument, and according to the order of Nature, pass to the fixed Stars.

CHAP. VIII

Of the Adoration of the fixed STARS.

.

t

-

e

S,

0

W

10

ď

10

0-

na

all

ri-

n

at

Ntiquity sufficiently affures us, that all the Stars in general, fixed or wandering, known or unknown, were esteem'd Gods by the Heathens, For lifting up their Eyes to those things above them. they observ'd that Constancy and Order in the Moion and Politions of the Stars, that oblig'd them to attribute a Divine Nature them, which feem'd to be United to each other in a perpetual League and Now when they observ'd that this was Covenant. most exactly and constantly kept by the Motion of he fixed Stars, they paid Adoration unto them, as eing the Causes of all things that are constant and egular in this Sublunary World. The Heathen had nany Gods, who tho' they were not Supream tlemelves, yet were his Militia. Thus all the Star are alled by the Hebrews the Host of Heaven, which, in Metaphorical sense, they said sought. Am ineed, nothing could be more natural and agreable, han for an Heathen, when he had accurately conemplated the Nature of the Stars. To condude, that

Br

me

M

Le

pu

me

ne

Tidi

wł

Ea

20 bei

est

Gl

as

bei

ed

CUC

and rea

gur

Div

Mo

one

are

gua

that

Div

ther

fixe

spec stan

ther

inti

that the fixed Stars were the Eternal Law and Book of God; and the Planets his Book of Prophecy. For the Supream God by a Natural Decree, hath written fome unalterable Principles of his Law, both in the Stars and the Hearts of Men, in regard it is very manifest, that some things Universally obtain in all. And why may not the same God have exhibited to us the reasons of things present and suture, by the Planets, in regard, all Sublunary Motion derives its Original from theirs.

The Stars therefore are the Universal Law and Prophets of God, which although they are Dumb, yet, like the true Indexes of a Clock, they point at things with the greatest exactness and certitude. Wise Men do observe and consult them, not according to the vain ridiculous and superstitious Form and Maxims of common, ignorant and soolish Astrologers; but by the observation of Events, when their Motion, Conjunctions, Oppositions and various Aspects are compar'd together.

It is very certain that the Stars act upon inferious Bodies, but whether they are free Agents or not, I shall not determine, tho' a great many Arguments may be brought to this purpose. Aristotle seems to be of this Opinion, lib. 2. de Cælo. cap. 12. The Operation of the Stars is to be esteemed the same as that of Animals and Planets. The Heathens were of Opinion that he Signs were God's twelve Counsellours, so that f Astronomers understood their Nature well, they would not be so liable to mistakes.

What induc'd the Heathers to the Adoration of the Sars, we have in some manner already shewn, and hall add some things here, being its proper place.

The first thing the Heathers consider'd, was their Height which is so vast, that according to Tycho Brahe, Brabe, the Orb of the fixed Stars is 19000 Semi-diameters of the Earth distant from it; according to Mersen. 20000, which space contains 53961647 Leagues, or 3 Miles. From whence may be computed, that if a Stone let fall from that Orb, should move a League in each Minute, it would be very near 102 Years before it would reach the Earth.

The Height of that Orb may also be inferr'd from this, that the fixed Stars have no sensible Parallax; whereas the Sun has three Minutes Parallax from the Earth, and the Moon sometimes a whole Degree.

Then their Magnitude, the least amongst them; being equal to the Moon and Mercury, and the greatest to Venus and Mars. Their Proportion to this Globe of Earth, is, a Star of the sixth Magnitude, as 11 to 1, and of the first, as 70 to 1; the rest being mean Proportionals. The Antients accounted the number of the fixed Stars that were conspicuous, to be 1002, the rest they esteemed obscure, and no ways observable, these at last (for what reason I cannot divine,) were divided into 48 Figure 1.

gures or Constellations.

0

3

d

o,

e.

C-

us

ts,

ot,

nts

to pe-

of

ion

10 ell,

of

WII,

per heir

ycho

abe,

The Heathens did not draw Arguments for the Divinity of the fixed Stars, from the variety of their Motions, they being always at the same distance one from the other, as much at least as our Senses are capable of observing; but the Motion and Language of the Planets was esteemed so wonderful, that without any other cause they have attributed Divine Honours to them. But it was very easie for them to be mistaken in this particular. For if the fixed Stars did not alter their Situation, with respect to one another (which the vacancies and distances in the shapes that were formerly ascribed to them by the Shepherds and Mariners doth seem to intimate) it is most certain that the Signs are moved a ved; from whence proceeds the Progession of the Equinox. The Constellation of Aries being now in the place of Taurus, Taurus in that of Gemini, and so of the rest; yet so that after some Excess, they seem to return to their former places, which some call the Motion of Access and Recess, and others the Motion of Trepidation. See the Famous dispute

it

te

th

far

W

ho

is I

of

Ea

wh

to 1

of

call

une flate

muc

the

berry

between Fof. Scaliger and Maginus.

The Celerity also of the Orb of the fixed Stars was another Reafon, why they afcribed Divinity to them. Its Motions fo rapid, that the Stars which are in the Equinox move 376750 Leagues in a Minute, or 60th part of an Hour. Now a Bullet shot out of the largest Cannon, if it were carried with an equal and continued force, would scarce fly round this Globe of Earth-in one hundred Hours. Nay (fays Vossius) what is the Swiftness of the Motion of the Sun to it. whose Globe is Forty times less, so that the Stars that are next the Equinoctial must be Forty times fwifter than the Sun; unless according to the Copernican System you will have the Earth move; which feems improbable, in regard this fluggish Terrestial weight, so unfit for Motion, would doubly exceed the velocity of the Cannon-Ball before mentioned. Tycho Brabe proves, that the fixed Stars do not only move in Longitude from the Vernal divition of the Zodiack, but in Latitude also: But this is nothing to our purpole.

Lastly the Heathers consider'd the Power and Esteacy of the Stars, for they observed that some sailed Tempests, others brought Rain, others Heat. But I shall not here enquire, whether in producing these effects, the fixed Stars were impregnated by the Planets, or on the contrary.

riss, was more especially Worshipped, particularly by the Egyptians, fo that according to some, they translated their Isis into it; tho', according to others, the Moon is Iss. When the Romans paid Religious Worship to the Stars, they facrificed Red Dogs (according to Festus) that the Yellow Fruits of the Earth might be brought to Maturity, which he elsewhere proves out of Actins Capito, where it is called a Dog-Sacrifice. This most splendid Star is fomerimes feen for a long time together; which as it made the Egyptians esteem it to be a Deiry, fo the Malign effects that it produc'd, both on the Earth, and in the Air, were the Reasons why they endeavour'd to render him propitious, by facrificing Red Dogs. So Statius, Fierce Syrius burns the breathles Field.

)

t,

05

8-

;

sh

u-

91 ars

nal

his

ffi-

led

Bat

ese

the

Sy-

arly

by

It being usual formerly to Sacrifice to the Gods, that that they might not be hurtful, as well as to obtain favour from them. The influence of this Star here would be much more pernicious to Mankind, did not the Etesian Winds blow from the Snow that is melted on the tops of the Mountains in the Heat of the Dog-days. Pifces was also Worshipped by the Eastern People, but more especially, the Assirians ; who they fay, had Sons and Grandfons, according to the Interpreter of Germanious and Hyginus. I am of Opinion that it was the Sign which the Greeks called Engonns, and faid, had Divine Honours paid unto it; if you will believe that Hercules was tranflated into this Star, as some are of opinion. So much for the Signs out of the Zodiack.

lsidorus says, that Jupiter Hammon was esteemed the Ram in the Zodiack, but Servius fays it was, Minerva, Manilius fays thus of it,

SHILD A START

Aries consults bimself, a Dignity Worthy a Prince, and Libra then doth see.

Which alludes to what we faid before concerning the Confiliary Deities. Gemini, according to some, were the Tyndarides, Castor and Pollux, the Sons of Leda, who were very propitious to Sailors; some thought them Hercules and Apollo, others Triptolemus and Fason, others Tethus and Amphion, and others some Samothracian Deities: But this is not strange, in regard every Country at that time Advanced their own Herces into the number of their Gods; for the Heathens, believing that the Souls of Illustrious Men were Immortal, called some particular Stars by their Name.

ti

8

0 th w

W

an Fi

So

He

bu

coi Ne

opi Tu

and

Tha

Son

on S

ng 1

we o

but h er t

The Sign Virgo, by some was called Astrea. From whence it's said Astrea has left the Earth, by some she was called Ceres, by others Atergatis, others Fortune, and by others Isis, unless you will have the Egyptian Isis to be the same as the Roman Ceres; others also called her Concord, but it is not certain whether she was the Goddess Panda.

Opinions concerning the two Fishes which the Antients called the Syrian Deities; for thus says German. in Arat. — And Pisces the two Syrian Deities, were not so various: but the reason why they were called Pisces, to me is not very evident. Whether it was that the Assyrians thought these two Stars seem'd to swim like Fishes in the Heaven above the Firmament? or whether, according to Hyginus, any thing was to be understood Mystically by it; I will recite his Words, as they are in Vossius, Those Deities were Venus and Cupid, as this Passage of Hyginus shews. Diogenetes Erythraus says, That on a certain time Venus came with Cupid to the River Euphrates.

Euphrates, where on a sudden they saw the Giant Typhon; Upon this, Venus threw her felf and Son into the River, and were both changed into Fishes, by which means they escaped the danger they were in. After this the Syrians who dwelt next to this place, forbore to eat any Fish for the future, being afraid, least if they should catch them, they might, upon a like occasion; obstruct the safety of the Gods, or take some of them: But Nieidius, the Interpreter of Germanicus, is of another opinion, and fays, these were those great Fishes that rolled that great Egg out of Euphrates, out of which, when a Dove had fat upon it for some days, was produc'd the Syrian Goddess, who is called Venus; and therefore the Syrians abstain from eating either Fish or Doves, as was shewn before out of Hyginus. So a certain Poet in the fixth Anthology, fays, Heliodorus Dedicated his Net to the Syrian Goddess, but One that had newer taken any Fish. For nothing could be more displeasing to this Goddess, than a Net that had been used in Fishing. They were of opinion that the Syrian Goddess afflicted those with Tumors that eat Fish. So Martial, lib. 6. Epigr. 44.

I swear to thee by the Syrian Tumors and Perfius, Sat. 5.

f

e

NS.

TS

e,

ed

5 }

us

ars

om

me

For-

the 0-tain

the fays

ities, were

Stars

bove

inus,

y it;

Chole ge of

That

River rates, The Gods destroy'd them, inflaming their Bodies.

That is the Syrian Goddes (which is Venus) and her son Cupid. See Scaliger on Manilius, and Salmasius on Solinus Polibistor. whatsoever was said concerning the Worship of Atergatis, lib. 1. cap. 23. there we consider the Syrian Goddes as an Animal Deity, out here as a Natural one, as she is worshipped under the Notion of the Moon, as we shewed before, or the Sign Pifces, as we have here Explain'd. Thus 2

G 3

f

A

H

W

th ai

C

mT

th

ve

Ca

th

w

far Voffins.

Give me leave to quote another place out of him, to prove that other Nations, even at this very Day, do Worship the fixed Stars, Sun, Moon and other Planets; for I would not rob that great Man of the Honour that is justly due to his incomparable Merit: His words are thefe. "Not only the Eastern People, and from them the Greeks and Romans, esteem'd all the Stars to be Gods ; but " other Nations also: which as I have already shewn of the Planets, fo it is evident likewife concerning the fixed Stars, from many Authors. Fofephus Acoffa tells us, that in the last, and this present Age, the Peruvians paid them the same Honour; for besides, God the Creator (who in their own Language is called Viracbocan, and after their Acquaintance with the Spaniards, Dios) they also Worshipped the Sun, Moon, the other five Planets, and the rest of the Stars. This Spanish Author writes to this effect, They particularly Ador'd that Constellation which we call Cabrillas, or the Goat, and they Colca: and commanded that fuch Offerings should be made to fome Stars, and fuch to others, those being particularly worthipped according as every ones necessity The Opisons Adored the Star Urcharequired. chillay, feigning it to be a Ram of divers Colours, who only took care of the preservation of Cattel; and it is thought to be the fame Constellation which the Astrologers call Lyra. Besides these two, they worlhipped two others that are near them, called Caebucbillay and Urruchillay, and fay, that one of them is a Sheep, and the other a Lamb. There are some who Adore another Star, called Machuachuay, that Ruled over the Serpents and Adders, from which they promised Safety to themselves; others also WOI- S

of

d

n

a-

ne

ld

ut

vn

ng

fa

he

es,

is ich un, the ect.

ich and to cu-

Tity

chu-

urs,

tel:

hich

they

Ca-

hem

ome

that hich

allo

WOI-

worshipped the Star Chuquichinchay, called the Tyger, who they believed to prefide over Tygers, Lyons and Bears. They were of opinion that there was not any Beaft or Bird upon the Earth, whose shape or image did not thine in the Heavens, by whose influence its Similitude was generated on the Earth, and its Species increased. Thus they worthipped divers Stars, which they called Charana, Topatalea, Mamana, Mirco, Mequiquiray, &c. agreeing with Plato in his Notion of Idea's.

Now that these Stars were Worshipped in Honour of the Supream God, is very evident from what was faid before, and also to all who will please to consult the Indian History; and from hence we may certainly conclude, that they neither formerly were, or now are worshipped, upon any other account.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Worship of HEAVEN.

Rom the Worship of the Stars, the antient Heathens proceeded to the Adoration of Heaven. Their Philosophers were of opinion, that it was a Corporeal Substance; and that the Stars did not move in a Vacuum, but fomething that was fixed. This was the opinion of Aristotle: They believ'd the Stars did act upon inferior Bodies, by the intervention of the Corporeal Nature of Heaven, nor can we by their influences fufficiently know what their Powers and Operations are; concerning which, much may be faid on both sides, but it not being to our purpose, we shall pass it by. What

481977

What the Romans called Calum, the Greeks called Æther, to which that Verse of Ennine, so often repeated by Cicero, hath relation. Behold this sublime brightness, the Jupiter which all invoke; Heaven also was called Calum or Calus. There was this Inscription dug out of Mons Calius; Optumus Maximus Calus Aternus; the most Good and Great Eternal Heaven; where the Attribute of most Good and Great, which Cicero, lib. 1. de N. D. affirms by the most universal Opinion, was due only to Jupiter, is here given to Heaven. According to some, Pythagoras feem'd to favour this Opinion, faying, that God was Corporeal, that Heaven was his Eyes, and the Sun and Moon other parts as in a Man, that the Elements were his inferiour Members. See Epiphan. lib. 1. de Hænes. Gent. But it is not very probable, that this was his Opinion; for we find elsewhere, that Pythagoras held but one Deity, the Maker of this Universe; and fays, that Heaven was animated by the Spirit of the World, which in reality was God himself. Thus Hierocles, on his Golden Verses; There is only one God maker of all things, who may be properly stiled the God of Gods, and the Supream and most Good God. And Zoroaster, Published by Fr. Patr. The Workman, who by his own Power only made the World; and a little before speaking of us our selves, The Father of Men and Gods, endued our Souls with a Mind, and our fluggish Bodies with a Soul. Therefore, when soever the Heaven, or all the Celestial Bodies, are called by the Name of Jupiter, we are not to understand that Eternal Deity that governs all things, but only some sensible Representation of him, as will appear both out of Herodotus and Strabo.

Upon this account it was, that the Heathers paid it this Adoration, and also for its immense Sublimity ang

L

E

G

p

th

P

0

m

10

re

na

Ar

En

6 tha

Ex

Na

on,

mes

of .

exce

and Magnitude; its Circular Form, the most perfect Form being agreeable to the most perfect Body; and its Brightness, being every where resplendent, Adorn'd with glittering Stars. And laftly, its Duration and Utility, when they confidered what an Univerfal influence it had over inferiour things.

These were the Reasons that induced them to believe, that the Heaven was fomething more than Humane, and so they attributed a Divine Nature

A Sylven ship a gase of the content of the content to it.

1.

nt

1-ty

en

bo

27/1

Fr.

the

es,

ba

re,

ies,

to all of

and paid

mity and

It was a Question amongst the most Learned, whether tho' the Heaven was very Permanent, it was also Erernal? Yet they generally agreed, that it was Eternal by a kind of Emanation from the Supream God, the posterior to him in order of Nature, as Light to the Sun. Indeed if the Heaven were a fimple Being, I should very readily be of their Opinion, that it was the fensible Image of God; but being compos'd of Matter and Form, and that in a Miraculous Order, we must have recourse here to more than a meer Emanation; and therefore it necessarily follows, that fomething more great and excellent is required for the making the Heaven and this Sublunary Orb, which must be its Original and Maker. Aristotle says, these things do necessarily Exist, Every Entity necessarily Exists, and as necessarily it is good, and so a Principle; by which he means some Entity that is most Excellent, and by which all others do Exist; and therefore adds, Therefore Heaven and Nature depend on such a Principle. And according to the most Learned Philosophers, for their Production, as well as Confervation; amongst others, Hermes has very sublime thoughts concerning God, calling him, The Preserver of Beings. Aristotle speaking of his Life, fays, The length of Life is according to the excellency of the Subject; ours Short, his Eternal. To the the same effect is that of Hermes, in the speech of the Mind, Goodness, Beauty, Happiness and Wisdom, are the Esfence of God.

But if all Beings did Exist by a satal necessity (as we hinted before) nay, even the very Original of all Beings of it self: how could he be Good and Wise? How could we be said to have a Liberty and free Will? For how could there be any Divine Goodness, when all things must be as they are, and no otherwise? Where Divine Wisdom, when Fate was absolute and determinate? And how could we pretend to any Liberty or Freedom of Acting, when the very Original of all Beings himself, the most Great and Good God, was limited and confin'd under a fatal necessity.

1

iı

0

I

di

111

m

b ol

1e

n

no

be an

W

en

ve

òn

CE

ap

the

the Re

Ar

ter

no

These Opinions ought to be exploded, being grounded on no solid reason; for Fate, that is, the order of things, proceeds only from the most Wise Maker of the World, who disposes of the most Minute things; being Prior to it, as the Cause to the Essect; the Supream Deity did exist in time before Fate; who acted freely accoording to his own good Pleasure; did unite and dispose of the Series of all things that exist; which Cicero, amongst others, lib. 1. de N. D. and lib. de Divin. acknowledges.

But more of Fate hereafter.

We now proceed to our Argument; it is very evident, that many things were unknown to the Antients, which the Telescope has discover'd; by which those are consuted, who held the Heavens to be solid; it is plain, that they are of an Airy Nature, and Pervious; because Comets are either Generated, or Ascend above the Orb of the Moon, and Mercury and Venus move always round the Sun, that two Planets move about Saturn, and sour others about Jupiter; that there are many spots that rise

d

e

9

ng

10

le

oft

to

evn

ies

0-

es.

ery

the by

ens

YTIL

het

00%

un,

0-

that

rise and set in the Sun; for which consult the most excellent Galileus, and since him, Scheiner; that Mars penetrates the Sans Orb, being sometimes seen above him, and soon after below him. Vossims brings another reason, which is the Roughness and Inequality of the Moon, from thence concluding, that she could not move, if the Heavens were hard, unless you allow a Vacuum, or Penetration of Bodies.

The Antients being ignorant of these things. made them have fo extraordinary an Opinion of the Heavens; and had some fort of Reasons to attribute Divinity to them (in fuch a Sense as they understood it, but it is quite rejected by us) as Sublimity. Perennity, Magnitude and Utility; for the common notion of the Incorruptibility of the Heavens, because none of the Antients in any Age did ever observe any Generation or Corruption in them. feems to me as ridiculous, as to suppose, that if a Man were in the Moon, he should conclude that nothing on Earth were liable to Corruption, because nothing can be discerned at so great a distance; or because he sees the Earth always of the same Form and Magnitude, should therefore conclude, that its whole Mass suffers no Alteration. But the Antients might have observed something in the Heavens very like our Sublunary Generation and Corruption, and those very considerable; for Pliny, lib. 2. cap. 26. from Hipparchus tells us, that a new Star appear'd in the time of Ptolomy Evergetes, and the two Antiochus's. Another in the time of the Emperor Adrian, Another in Cassiopea in the Reign of Otho. Another near the fame, in 1264. Another in Cassiopea, in 1572. which disappear'd after two Years, leaving a Chasm in its room; and no Body did ever dispute, whether it was compos'd of Celestial Matter or not, because by Observation, it was near three Hundred times larger than this Globe of Earth. Another in 1577, which appear'd for seven Weeks. Another 1600, in the Swans Breast; another in 1504, in the Eighteenth Degree of Sagittary. And another most Prodigious one, whether it were a Star or Comet, appear'd in 1508, which the most accurate Astronomers were of opinion was Situate in the Heavens, vide Schein, in

H

11

CE

m

th

th

al]

Fa

OW

pr

fto

ful

ply

Sei

Wa

do

eve

Sen

zan

jea

pro

rosa Ursina.

It is very much to be question'd, whether the Sun it felf is composed of fuch Matter, as is Eternally durable; especially, if according to some of the Antients, he is fed by Vapours, which is the opinion of fome Moderns alfo. To this purpose may be brought what Petrus Mexias relates, that in the time of the Emperor Justinian, for most part of the Year, tho' the Season was very serene and clear, yet the Sun shin'd so very dimly, that the Moon gave almost as much Light; from whence as is reported, it came to pass, that there was an Universal Famine over the whole World: and F. Patricius is of opinion, that the Sun was Rarified at that time, and so had less Light and Heat. Paulus Diaconus also says, that in 790. the Sun was Dark, and did not emit his Rays for Seventeen Days. What the Mexicans report of the Sun's being four times Extinct, and as often Renewed, feems to me very improbable: I can, with Patricius, indeed allow a Diminution or Rare. faction, but cannot admit him to be quite Extinct Let this suffice to confute them that are of opinion that the Heavens are not subject to Mutation.

But the Antients had other Reasons also for the Adoration of Heaven, they were of opinion that it had a Soul; for Aristotle, C. 2. de Cælo, says, The Heaven is animated, and has the Principle of Motion.

Now

e

o'

25

to 18

at

in ys.

ot

en

In,

re.

ict.

ion

the

t it

The

tion.

OW

Now in regard this Principle, according to them, is Self-constitutive; they thought it so much more noble, than the Soul that rules in our Bodies, as the first and independent cause exceeds the second and dependent. Thus imagining a two-fold Nature in the Heavens; a Form, or Animal Nature, and a Corporeal or Material; they distinguished right or lest, thick or thin Parts, and other Organs in it, as we said before. In the corporeal Nature of Heaven, they Worshipped its Soul, and God himself in it, which agrees with Aristotle, who calls the Supream Soul the Chief God, and inseriour Souls lesser Deities.

This Opinion obtaining every where, it will not feem fo very strange, if the Heathers so universally worshipped Men, endow'd with extraordinary Excellencies as Gods: So that nothing was formerly more common than the Theanthropus, or God Man;

thus Paul and Barnabas were taken for Gods.

But it remains still in doubt, what the Soul of the Heaven amongst the Antients was. Aristotle allows it an Intellectual, Appetitive, and Motive Faculty, but not a Sensitive; tho' it be one of his own Axioms, that the more Excellent Faculties do presuppose the less, yet he fays, that is to be underflood of Mortals only; fo that according to the most subtil Philosophers, the Soul of Heaven doth not apply it felf to particular Objects by any External Sense, but by its intellect only, which is the same way, fay they, as Souls separated from their Bodies, do apprehend. I am much of their Opinion, that every perfect Being doth not want the External Senses, for they are not capable of having cognizance of any besides Transitory and Perishing Objects; and Animals are endued with them, for the providing of fit Food for their Prefervation, and the the avoiding whatfoever is injurous and hurtful: but the Soul of Heaven has no need of any fuch; requiring very little Nutriment, and being very fecure from dangers.

There is also another way of exerting the Intellectual Faculty by a Communion of Forms; by which means the Celestial Intelligencies mutually know each other, and whatever elfe proceeds from those Forms, and passes into all things, either here, or in the Heavens themselves. Alexandr. Apbrodis. feems to Embrace both Opinions. Which Termonines in his Book, de Nat. Cali, explains thus; The Heaven understands by Receiving the thing that it ought to understand, and not its Species; because it is intelligible in its own Nature, and a Species is only required where a thing is to be understood by the Sense, and is Material. I shall not enlarge upon the Degrees of comparison between the Intelligencies; as the Sun's being more intelligent than the Moon; fo of the Planets, according to fome, in regard this Doctrine depends upon nothing but meer conjectures.

I cannot but take notice here, of the Opinion of Simplicius, which some of the Latins have followed; he says, that the first Mover, according to Aristotle, was not the Supream God; but the chief Intelligence both in Place and Dignity after him; where he endeavours to reconcile Plato and Aristotle, who gives God, that is, the Summum Bonum, the Dignity of Precedence; next the Mind, which is the Off-spring of God, and Architect of Nature; then Nature, the work of Mind; but some are of Opinion, that Simplicius hath not fairly deliver d Aristotle's Opinion here, and brings these Places, 8. Phys. Context. 48, 49, 52. and 12. Metaph. Context. 43. to prove their affertion. But they must needs own, that Aristotle, besides the Mover of the Supream Orb, the cause of

2

d

25

J

22

A

N

40 diurnal diurnal Motion, did establish lesser Gods, that were Movers of the inserior: When he says, That the first Mover has neither Parts or Magnitude; it seems very dissicult to me to be understood, yet I suppose he means, that God is infinite, and therefore incorporeal. He also, in another Place, says, that which is infinite has no Parts; which is most undeniably true; for otherwise, the half of Insinity being trebled, would exceed it self, which is most absurd. It must also sollow, that if the first Mover is without Magnitude, he must consequently be incorporeal; so that the Philosopher's words here, do seem to agree with our notion of God, but if any Person think otherwise, he is at his liberty.

n

to 113

al.

on

re

-10

P-

of

d;

tle,

nce

he

rho

y of

ing

the

im-

non 48, heir

totle.

e of

irnal

I proceed to the Names of Heaven, that were uled by the Antients; here I must premise that common distinction. That all things are done, either by Reason and Counsel, Fortune and Chance, or Fate and Necessity. Upon this account, Heaven had three Names; the first Minerva, the second Fortune, and the third Parca (one of the Destinies). Minerva the Greeks call Athenaa or Athena; the prefided over Study and Learning; the Egyptians call'd her Neith. Cicero mentions five of them, but they were all Mortals, and afterwards Translated into the number of the Gods: So Tzetzes in Lycophron; There were many Minerva's and Venus's; but by Minerva, is Mystically understood Heaven, or rather its highest Part: So Macrob. lib. 2. Sac. cap. 4. The most diligent Enquirers into truth, fay, that the middle Ather " Jupiter; the lowest part of the Air, and the Earth, Juno; and the utmost beight of Heaven, Minerva; wherefore Pharnutus Says, she is called Atheronia. And St. August. lib. 4. de C. D. cap. 10. They fay that Minerva possesses the bigbest part of Heaven, upon which account the Poets feigned, that she was Born out of Jupiter's

Va

of he thi

fcr

ing Ha

Te

une

ver

Bac I. c

to I on of c

no

une he

he

hera hat

nan Day

ons

utio

ord

Dear

DA

d, :

her

ubl

1

em

piters Head. Martianus Capella, calls her, She that w bigber than Jupiter. Some by her, mean Divine Providence, of this opinion is Pharnutus, who fays, there were Temples Built in Honour of the Min nerva of Providence. The Heaven also was antiently called Fortune, but especially by the Chaldeans and Genethliacks, who predicted the Event of things from the disposition of the Stars; they also underflood fomething more than Chance or Accident by the word Fortune; upon this account, they had a particular regard to the Moon, esteeming her the continual cause of her own Change, and of all things Sublunary: For they were of Opinion, that the Beginning and Generation of all things, and their End and Corruption depended on Humidity, over which the Moon ruled and presided, and that the Mystery of things passing into other Forms, was perform'd this way. Some, especially the Poets, thought Fortune a Goddess sent down from Heaven, Juven. Sat. 10. Fortune, it's we make thee & Deity, and place thee in Heaven. Tho' she were blind, yet they esteemed her a great Enemy to Reason and Constancy.

But the Philosophers had quite other sentiments, concerning Fortune, Cicero lib. 1. de Divin. says very excellently, Fortune is, when any thing falls out, or happens so, that it might either not fall out, or happen as all, or might fall out or happen otherwise. Nevertheless, Fortune was held in great veneration by the Antients; and they were of Opinion, that their Prayers might prevail for those things that were fortuitous in their own Nature only, and not where things were oblig'd by the Law of Nature, or the Universal Decree of Fate. Therefore Cicero, lib. 3. de N. D. says, that Fortune ought to be desired of God, and Wildom was to be acquired by our selves.

e

it

d

y,

at 15, 0-

m

6 ere

to

nts,

ery

, or

n at

the-

the heir

sisv

here

the

ib. 3.

d of

The

The Effigies of this Fortune is on a Medal of Ner va's, representing her like a Matron, with a Crown of Glory, Seated on a Throne, holding a Sceptre in her Left-Hand, and a pair of Shears in her Right, with this Inscription, Fortuna P. R. By others she is described with a Cornucopia, and Rudder of a Ship, holding the first in her Left, and the other in her Right-Hand. At Preneste, where there was a very famous Temple erected to Fortune: She was Worshipped under the representation of two Sisters; one being very Fair, was called, Good Fortune; the other Black, Bad Fortune, who was also Worshipped. Cicero, lib. r. de Leg. fays, there was formerly an Altar Erected to Bad Fortune, in the Esquilia. Cebes, in his Table, describes her Blind and Mad, sitting with her Feet on a round Stone, which is the most received Way of describing her to this very time. Pausanias is of nother Opinion, and quoting Pindar, makes Forune one of the Parcæ, tho' they feem rather to be he same with Fate. Spartianus tells us, that two of he best of the Roman Emperors had so great a Veheration, not only for Fortune, but her Image also, hat Severus, when he was on his Death-Bed, comnanded that her Image should be set every other Day interchangeably in the Chambers of the two ons he left, to intimate to them the equal diffriution of the Empire. And Antoninus Pius (acording to the same Author) being at the point of Peath, order'd the Statue of Fortune to be carried in-Marcus Antoninus's Chamber, which was efteem-, a transferring of the Government upon him. hey did not only keep Golden Statues of Fortune their Private Appartments, but shewed them ublickly.

I might fay much more concerning the feveral emples of Fortune, that were among the Antiates,

H

0

P

C

L

P

fic

W

in

te

Pa

M

Ne

fai

for

W

ous

ple

acc

Par

froi thir this

Per

Epr

nan

ant

hey

nd

Prenestines, Greeks and Romans; but more particularly that at Elis, of which Pausanias gives an account; also of her being the same with Isis, according to Apuleius, in regard (as we said before) Isis was certainly the same with the Moon; but I shall wave this at present, tho' I cannot omit observing, that Good Event was Worshipped after the Deity Fortune (a Description of whose Statue that was in the Capitol, we have in the 35th. Book of Pliny.) And Favour was a Deity also amongst the Romans, besides Felicity, one of Hercules Daughters that was Deisides Felicity, one of Hercules Daughters that was Deiside, as appears by a Medal of Julia Mammea Augusta, where there is a representation of Felicity; tho' different from that of Cebes.

This is sufficient to prove, that Fortune antiently signified only the Celestial influences on inferiour things, and more especially, that of the Moon; and that she was Worshipped under that consideration.

The Parcæ also, may be easily proved to be the same as the Heaven. They were supposed to be three; the first presided over Man's Generation, the second over his Life, the third his Death. Clotho carried the Distaff; Lachesis Spun, and Atropos or Death, cut or broke the Threads, for which Reason they were called the Wool-managing Sisters; for they were thought to spin out Man's Life, of whom Martial says,

The cruel Goddess broke the fatal Thread.

Some were of Opinion, that they were the Offfpring of Chaos. Cicero in his third Book, de N.D. fays, they were the Daughters of Erebus and Nex. Plato, lib. 10. de Rep. will have them to be the Daughters of Necessity, plac'd on a Throne, equidiffant n

s,

as

ea

7;

tly

Juc

de-

the

be ion,

ath.

ropos Rea-

tor

hom

Off-

N. D.

Nox.

e the equi-

distant

distant from each other, Clothed in White, with Crowns on their Heads, Singing to the Musick of the Sirens: Lachefis declaring things paft, Clotho the present, and Atropos those to come; each of them with their Mother Necessity, managing the Distaff; Clotho with her Right, Atropos with her Left, and Lachesis with both Hands. An Antient Epigram in Paulanias, tells us, that the first of these, which prefided over Generation, was the Celestial Venus, as we hinted before. She was not the Venus Libitina, in whose Temples Funeral Ensigns were Reposited, as Plutarch fays. Clem. Alex. observes, that the Parce were Allegorically called the Parts of the Moon, viz. the Thirtieth, the Fifteenth, and the New Moon; but this is incoherent with what was faid before.

I shall not insist upon the Adoration of the Parcæ, for it is very strange to think that they should be Worshipped, who would be no ways made propitious. Upon which account it was, that the Temple of Necessity, their Mother, and of Violence, which according to Pansanias, was at Corinth, were kept shut, it being unlawful for any to enter them. The Parcæ Mystically signified that Celestial insluence, from whence Fate, or the Permanent Order of things, which have a Beginning and Ending in this Sublunary World, proceed, and pass through several certain stated Changes, Vicissitudes and Periods.

Let me here observe, that the Antients did not represent Death, as we do, with a meagre Countenance, thin Jaw'd, and deep Forehead, but pleasant and compos'd, as the Image of Sleep: and they generally said, Such an one is gone from amongst in the Fear of Death might not strike Terror, and the Minds of Men be posses'd, that nothing H 2 but but their Bones remained after this Life. For which reason, they were the more Valiant, and inclin'd to the Practice of Virtue, because Death was esteem'd by them only as a Passage, for the Good, to a better Life; thinking it very Base and Mean, that nothing of those that had lead exemplary Lives here, should remain after Death, but the Carcass only, which

M

a

P

gi

0

P

th

th

th

on

wł

im

is

tha

lar

cer

at]

flat

had und

F

neit free

nect

alfo

each

just Prov

they threw off.

There was another part of Fate or Destiny Recor. ded, not only by the antient Poets, but by fome Philosophers also, especially, the Stoicks, to which they made even Jupiter himself Subject. To this they Attributed all those things that they said, were beyond the Power of God himfelf. As that God could not procure his own Death, nor cause, that after a Person had actually Lived, he should not have Lived; that he had no right, but that of Oblivion, over things past, and many such like; which feem to imply nothing more, than that it is beyond our Comprehension to conceive, that God, being Eternal and Immortal, should be any way liable to Death; or that which has been once actually done, should be undone again: for such Propositions as these, imply Contradictions; but what they fay upon this Subject, is of very little Import, in regard it is contrary to the Dictates of common Reason, that things should be, and not Therefore Men ought not to express themfelves fo irreverently concerning the Most Good and Great God; neither can their Vain and Ridiculous Conceits derogate any thing from his Omnipotence; but do only discover the Ignorance and Weakness of Humane Nature. Alex. Aphred. lib. 1. de Fato, entirely destroys the Doctrine of Fate, acknowledging nothing but a conftant course of Nature, and many others are of his Opinion. Aristotle places

h

0 ď

19

ng

ld

-10

ne

ch

his 919 od

nat

101)b-

e;

it hat

ny

nce

uch but

ttle

ot

not em-

and

lous

ipoand

b. 1.

ac-

Na istotle

laces

places Fates in Natural Causes, and owns a Divine Providence, with respect to them; but that it was not extended beyond the Moon, esteeming the Stars capable of performing all the rest, unless, where Man's free Will did obtain. He denied that God did take care of Singulars and Individuals, otherwife, than as they were contained in their Genus and Species; faying, It was beneath him to mind Particulars; but the Stagyrite was guilty here of great absurdity, being ignorant of what the Mind, or true Nature of God was, or in what he took Pleafure and Delight. This was more arrogant than became a modest Philosopher, and exceeded the Bounds of right Reason; but what is still worse, this Opinion struck at the Foundation of all Religion; for if God did not regard Individuals, for what end should daily Prayers be sent up to him? And what would all Religion signifie? Which would be impious to imagine. But perhaps the Philosopher is to be understood, that it was absurd to think, that the Bleffed God did take care of each Particular every Moment, who had given Orders concerning them from the Beginning; of which more at large when I come to Treat of Heroes being tranflated into Heaven, who, according to his Opinion, had the management of those Affairs, immediately under God.

His Mafter Plato acknowledged Fate also, but so as neither to destroy Divine Providence, nor exclude free Will in Man. But he makes fuch a fit Connection of all these things amongst themselves, and also with those which are called Gontinentia, that each may have its proper part; especially, if the just order of things, or Fate, proceed from Divine Providence;

Now.

th

W

ot

de

ric

th

CE

th

T

n

2

th

E

it

E

01

0

01

I

ir

m

th

2

L

Se

n

Now, if the Will of Man doth determine of that fit order of things, in those only that are within the compass of his Power, by this we may Extricate our selves out of that Labyrinth of Controversies, which has so much disturbed this present Age. Chalcidius says most excellently, that It is in a Man's own Power, to lead a very Wicked Life, but he was under a fixed manifest of being purished.

fatal necessity of being punished.

There was a kind of Mathematical Fate, said by Sext. Empir. to be Invented by the Chaldeans; but according to Herodotus by the Egyptians, who also had Sacred Oracles, and Religious Rites, and made Altars, Images, and Temples for their Gods, that is, the Stars; the same Authors tells us, that they first found out the Years. Lucretius says, the Chaldeans and Babylonians, could not agree about this Fate.

Babel, Chaldean doctrines to disprove, All Astrologick Arts from them remove.

It is not very evident what that Doctrine was; the Babylonian Numbers, of which Horace speaks, lib. 1. Ode. 2. has no relation to the Stars, and so to Fate, but to a certain kind of Divination by Numbers.

But I need not enlarge here, for the whole Doctrine of The fate of Nativities is meerly conjectutal. Astrologers never Predict any thing of particular Events that is certain, tho' they may of the more general; therefore it is very insignificant, to Predict the Happiness or Missortunes of a Man's Life, from the Horoscope of his Nativity; for Ptolomy himself says, That a Person that is skilful in this Art, may prevent the Operations of the Stars, for they only incline, and do not constrain. Albumazar's Observation is worth the taking notice of, if it be true, that feveral Religions began in feveral Ages of the World, at that time when Jupiter was in Conjunction with Saturn, or any other Planet; tho' I cannot deny but that he hath related feveral fabulous Stories concerning the duration of some Religions.

The next is the Stoick Fate, which hath its Original from Heaven also, tho' more rigid and severe than the former. Fate and Providence, according to them, are different; they say, that Fate, after a certain manner, proceeds from Providence; so that their Fate is not Blind, but Wise and clear Sighted. Thus, if any one say, that he was under a satal necessity of Sinning, they answer, that he is under a satal necessity also of being Punished; and so by this satal Decree, they do not destroy the Just and Equitable System of things, but settle and confirm it; establishing Virtue above all things; thus they do not destroy the Causes of things, but will have Essets to be the consequence of their due dispositions: See more of this in Cic. de N.D.

I shall not here dispute the truth of this Opinion of the Stoicks; for I think the Platonists have far out-done the other Philosophers on this Subject. I will conclude with the Words of Seneca here speaking of God, he says, If you call him Fate, you are not mistaken, it is he that determines all things; the Cause of Causes. If you call him Providence, you are right also, it is from his Pleasure that the World is Provided for, that it remains entire, and exerts its Powers. If you call him Nature, you are guilty of no Crime, it is he, from whom all things had their Original, by whose Spirit we Live. If you call him the World, he is whatsoever is seen; the whole endued with its Parts, and sustains Him-

Jelf and His.

0

t

e

Ι.

€,

le

1-

T.

ıt,

15 ny

rt,

nb-

ie,

So much for Celestial Fate, according to the Opinions of the Antient Philosophers. I shall say nothing thing here concerning Christian Fate, as the Learned Vossius calls it; the very Name being exploded amongst Christians; altho' in my Opinion, it rather differs from the Platonick in Words than Reality; but 'tis my design to treat only of those things that have respect to the Religion of the Heathens.

CHAP. X.

A

n

0 fh

fo

th

to 21 ne

 \mathbf{T}

he

no

fre

ha

Ea

the

ter.

chi

Concerning the Adoration of the Four Elements, and their several Names.

ATE have treated of the Stars and Heaven, which, to use the Words of Cicero lib. 1. Academ. is what the Philosophers called the Principle or Beginning in mixt Bodies. Of the Four Elements Fire is most subtil, most acute and most adapted for Motion. Air is subtil, acute, and next to Fire fittest for Motion. Water is thick, obtuse and moveable. Earth is most thick, most obtuse, and permanent or motionless. Aristotle in his Metaphysicks says, The Elements are called the last Bodies into which others are divided, but they cannot be divided into other Bodies of different Species. According to Cicero and some others, Fire and Air have a Motive and Active Power, Water and Earth are only Passive. Aristotle will have the Air to be Paffive, by reason of its Humidity; and that the Water is more Active than Paffive, from its Coldness; but this Argument will prove invalid, if the Air be naturally most Cold, as most Learned Men are of opinion: for when it doth not receive the heat of the Sun, it makes every thing very cold, turning even Water it self into Ice. But the Quality of Air and Water are so mixt and combined, that it

d

15

e-

its 10 est

le.

or the

are lif-

Va-

ive

and its, if ned

old,

lity

at it is difficult to determine what is proper and genuine to each; for condensed Air and rarified Water differ very little.

The Chinese will not admit the Air to be any Element: for what we call Air, they fay is nothing but the Breath of our Mother Earth; which nourishes and feeds us as long as we live here, and weans us at our death; the Soul then being fet at liberty to act according to its own pleasure (if it be natural) fo that the doth not take away Breath from Man, but the Man from Breath. For what occasion could our Souls have for Air, when taking their flight into more pure Regions, they want no inferior Elements? Whether this Chinese Philosophy will bear the test or not, it is known for certain truth, that when Men go up to the top of the highest Mountains, such as the Andes in the West Indies, they are not only short-breathed, but the Lungs not being able to perform their office by reason of the tenuity of the Air, they will fall down fenfeless, and foon expire, unless those that follow them do carry them speedily to the lower parts of the Mountain. Which is an argument that the Air we breath in, and which is near the Earth, ought to be fomething thicker. This I thought fit to hint, that the Learned may hence take occasion to make some Enquiries into this Opinion of the Chinese. For if what we call Air, is nothing but a thin Smoak or Exhalation, that arises from that Humid Matter, which is rarified and exhaled by that Heat, which is in the Bowels of the Earth; there are but three Elements.

But to pursue our Subject, we shall here admit them to be Four; which the Pythagoreans call a Quaternary, swearing by that Number, as the most Holy Deity. Hierocles will have all things to proceed from this Number, as from their Root and Foundation.

Thus

Thus the Addition of all the Numbers from One to Four, makes Ten beyond which no Country or Language ever accounted without adding Unity to it. Again, this Number also contains all kind of Numbers; Even and Odd, Square and Cube, Long and Broad, Tubal, Pyramidical, Prime and Compound; as Georg. Ven. has observed, lib. 3. de Harmonia Mundi. The Number Four also contains all Musical Concords, having Double, Treble, Quadruple, Sesquialtera, Sesquitertia; from whence are Diapason, Disdiapason, Diapente; and Diatessaron and Diapason is the same as Diapente. Hence it was that Agreement or Harmony in the Symbolical Qualities of the Elements was found; to which this of Boethim alludes:

L

H

V

1

E

A

is

in Di Ba

an

Di

Ba

on

W

the Air

ari

wh

twe

act litie

to e

who

take Fr.

ALL:

- Thou bindest the Elements with Numbers.

But the Antients found Geometrical Proportion, as well as Harmonical and Arithmetical, in the Four Elements. Timeus Locrus a Pythagorean, and Plato after him, gave the Elements thefe fort of Figures. First, they said, the Earth was a Cube of eight Angles and fix Sides, like a Die, by reason of its Stability, Gravity and Unfitness for Motion. Fire, 2 Pyramid of four Bases and four Angles, being the fittest Figure to Ascend. Air an Octoedron, confifting of eight Bases, six solid Angles, and Twenty four Planes; being, next Fire, that which most naturally Afcends. Water an Eicosaedron, having twenty Bases, and twelve Angles, being, by its flexible Nature, fit for Motion, and very eafily divisi ble; all which Figures proceed from a Quaternary. The Earth from the two first Squares. The Fire out of four Bases, and as many Angles. The Air ou of twice four Bases, being double, to make it more capable a pable of penetrating on each fide, and fitter for Motion; and the plain Angles are fix times four. The Water of twenty Bases, and twelve Angles, which together make Thirty two, which is a Number compos'd of two Squares, whose Root is four; the Bases also are five Quaternaries, and the Angles three, and all these constitute the Universe in a Duodecaedron; which consists of twelve Pentagon Bases, and twenty Solids, and fixty Planes, which all arise from Quaternaries, twelve from Three, twenty from Five, and fixty from Fifteen. The most exact agreement of all those Elements, is to be found out of their Bases and Angles.

;

1-

if-

is

nt

he

1145

, 25

our

Plato

ures. An-

Stare, 2 g the conventy

molt aving

flexi-

divisi

ernary.

Fire Ou

capable

The proportion of the Bases of Air to those of Fire, is double, in Angles one and an half, and double in Planes; whence arises the Harmony of a double Diapason and Diapente. The proportion of the Bases of Fire, with respect to the Earth, is one and an half, and double in Angles, which make a Diapason and Diapente again. The proportion of the Basis of the Earth with respect to Water, is a triple one and a third, in Angles one and an half; whence arises a Diapason, Diapente and Diatesseron in the Bases, and a Diapente in the Angles. Water to Air in Bases, is a double and one and an half, whence ariles a Diapason and Diapente, in Angles double, which make a Diapason. But the proportion between Fire and Water, Air and Earth, is not so exact; they having a direct Contrariety in their qualities from that proportion which the Elements have to each other, when they are plac d in order, and where two always agree by a Medium, which partakes of each; as the ingenious may observe. See Air ou Fr. Ge. Ven. Tom. 3. de Harmonia Mundi. But Fof. it more and all and a confirm, and Gramma-Grammaticus de Mundi Eternit, makes some Objections against the Octaedron and Eicosaedron; to which Carpentar. in Alcin. cap. 2. answers, That it is most certain, that Elements receive all Figures in their mixtures; wherefore I think the Controversie may be foon ended, for the Pythagoreans spoke of the proper Figure of the Elements, and those of the other Opinion of the adventitious or accidental. Theo, lib. de Igne tells us, that Fire is of a Pyramidal Form. which the higher it is, the more distant it is from Fuel, and fo rifes to a point. But Geo. Venet. is of Opinion, that all these things in the four Elements. have some secret relation to the Tetragammaton of the Hebrews; the Truth of which, I shall leave to others to determine.

That Fire only amongst all the Elements, was applied to God, may be gathered from Deut. and St. Paul, or Clement, or who ever was the Writer to the Hebrews, where it is expresly said, God is a Fire; which was the Opinion of the antient Persians; but this is to be understood cautiously.

The Elements being so abstructe and mysterious, and the reasons and proportions of their various mixtures, exceeding Man's comprehension, and all Corporeal things, deriving their Original from them, and being dissolved into them again, at last; this made the Heathens pay them Adoration, as well as the Stars and Heaven. They thought it very incongruous, that, in regard the whole World was the fensible Image of God, the most remote Parts should be Worshipped, and the nearest contemned.

The Heathens being inclin'd by these Reasons and several others, which we mentioned in the beginning, were very zealous to pay a particular Worship to the Elements. To this purpose their Priests invented

ſi

to

W

Fin

En

Ha

me

for me

ny

the

for

ing

the

fucl

time

that

VOU

e

0.

1, m

of

5,

to

as

to

e;

ut

us,

ous

all

om

ft;

rell

ery

rld

ote

on-

and

in-

hip

in-

wented divers Rites and Ceremonies, to engage the Minds of the People, and obliged them to a Religious observance of them. In the very first Ages, they delivered some very secret Mysteries to the common People; but they were of their own Invention, and they open'd, or explain'd them to the People as they pleased, or sometimes, if they thought sit, conceal'd them; which was done in the sacred Rites of Proserpina, and others; for it was absolutely necessary, that the rude Multitude should be kept in ignorance, of some things; especially, such as neither the Priests themselves, nor any other Mortals could sufficiently understand, and affert to be of Divine Original.

Of FIRE.

I Begin with Fire, the most pure Element; the Heathens thought it to be next the Ather or Heaven. Ocellus Lucanus, an Hearer of Pythagoras. was the first, I know of, that placed this Elementary Fire under the Moon, and above the Air: Then Empedocles fell in with this Opinion, and after him, Harpocrates. Aristotle also was of the same sentiment, though he conceal'd its being Ocellus's before him. But as this notion concerning the Element of Fire, was not very well entertain'd by many of the most Learned amongst the Antients, so the Moderns have quite exploded and rejected it; for whether this Elementary Fire, be either a Burning Coal, a Flame, or only Light, and is no way the Object of the exterior Senses, though it is of such a vast Magnitude, that it is Eight hundred times greater than the Sun, and a Thousand times than the Earth; yet it doth not confume or deyour, but in its own Nature, is mild and gentle. But

h

a

W

tu

th

an

di

A

th

of

pre

ma len

tha

dy

am

Poz

Ani

Na

Ful

Ma

pre

as v

E

on

ther

But how then does this differ from the Æther? And how can it descend here, to be mix'd with the Elements of Air, Water and Earth?

Now, an igneous Power may be observed to be dispersed through all things, here and there from the Sun, and in some fort from the Stars, and even in the very bowels of the Earth; and this sort of Fire, the Moderns prove by a great many Arguments. Therefore it is absurd, to suppose this Element of Fire, and its vast thickness, which some Astronomers say, is 115567 thousand Paces, and is neither to be seen, nor does any other way discover it self by its Effects; nor can it be conceived, how so great and bright an Element, should remain undiscovered by the Senses, when Stars that are so far above it, which are only enlightned by the Sun, do appear so bright and sparkling.

Wherefore I have made the Sun to be the Fountain of Light, to which the Terrestial and Subterraneous in some measure is subservient, and exercifes its Function every where, being instead of a Vicegerent to the Sun upon Earth, performing its principal Offices. Thus the Antients Worshipped the Sun symbolically by the Fire, as they did the Supream God in the Sun; thinking it very abfurd, not to pay some external Adoration to those things that had fuch manifest appearances of Divinity. But besides, they did not esteem Fire a meer Element only, but the Form, Life and Motion of the Hippocrates goes farther, calling it the Sense allo; for he was of Opinion, that Heat could fee and hear, that it was not subject to Corruption, and that Fire was so fertile, that it did generate it self in a more particular manner, by a sudden Renovation, shining out of the confinement it was in, by the other Elements; for tho' Elements feems to have have some analogy to Male and Female, yet Fire hath something more Superior in it self. So Seneca, The Egyptians made two of each Elements, the Male and Female. In the Air they said, the Wind was Male, and that which seem'd to be Motionless and Misty, Female. The Salt-water they accounted Male, and Fresh, Female. What was hard in the Earth, as Stones, &c. was also Male, and that which was soft and fit for Culture. Female.

T

1-11 0

n-

1--15

a

its

ed

he

rd,

ngs

ity.

e-

the nle

tee

and felt

ova-

, by

ns to have

And indeed, if what some Botanists say, be true, that both Sexes may be found in the very Trees and Plants: The Egyptians were in the right, to think that there might be some kind of impersect distinction of the Sexes in the Elements themselves. And because Fire gathers together Homogeneous things, and separates Heterogeneous, it was esteem'd the chief Artificer in the Constitution and Fabrick of this World. If we our felves were not daily preserved by internal Heat, the Frame of our Humane Nature would be foon diffolved, and the Elements would return to their pristine State; fo that the greatest part of the Fabrick of Humane Body is to be attributed to natural Heat. Parmenides. amongst the Philosophers, held Fire to be the Principal of the Universe: Heraclitus Ephesius, a Fiery Power; and Hippocrates, according to Galen, fays, an Animated Heat, is the Author of all the Works of Nature: Hippasus Metapontinus worshipped the Fire, Julius Firmicus tells us, that the Persians and all the Magi that lived there, did highly effeem Fire, and preferr'd it before all the other Elements; which is not strange, in regard they worshipped it as a God, as will appear hereafter.

But in regard Authors have been very copious upon this subject, I shall leave the Reader to consult them, and shall only add, that the fews (as much as can be collected from their own words) have always given their God, or the God of Israel this Title, Exod. 3. 27. 19, 18. 24, 17. Deut. 4. 12, 15. and 24. where, and Deut. 9. 3. He is plainly called a Consuming or Devouring Fire, and Heb. 13. 29. as we noted before. Thus it was commanded, Levit. 6. 6. to keep a perpetual Fire upon the Altar; which Custom also obtained amongst the Persians, Greeks and Romans, of which hereafter; but consult Commentators upon this Subject.

In regard, Fire was a Symbol of Divinity amongst the Gentiles (as Vossius makes appear) many Honours were Decreed to be paid it, and it was worshipped under different Names. The first that worshipped Fire, was Nimrod, called Ninus also, for in the Chron. Alex. it is faid, He taught the Assyrians to Worship Fire: from whence, says the Learned Vossius, it is probable, that the City of Babylon was called Ur, which otherwise is Urie and Camarina; the Chaldean Priests, being antienly called Cumerim. Voffins is also of Opinion, that the whole Country of Chaldea, was called Orchoa, from Ur: The Latin word Uro, to burn, and the Greek word Pyr, Fire, derived from Ur; He likewise says, it is very probable that Abraham was Born in this City, who is faid to have found out the Chaldean Philosophy, and, according to Gen. 11. 21. departed out of it, and his Brother died there; but it is still uncertain, what Progress this Worship made amongst the Chaldeans and Affyrians.

It's beyond all doubt, that the Persians ador'd Fire, Herod. lib. 3. gives the Reason why they did not burn their Dead, esteeming it impious to feed the God Fire with a Carcass. Hence, I am of Opinion, arose the Custom of sacrificing Men alive; nay, even their most beloved Children; the Priests per-fwading

C

fw

an

and

Cr

fav

Gre

2 diff

tho

ther

der

bef

Gre

ratl

It i done

Aill

Afi

Fire

can

out

was

this

Prie

of i

rant

F

ick

whi

his

calle

Sara

non

orde

ays,

plac

1

0

d

je

ot

e,

0is

id,

nd

in,

al-

ire,

not the

on,

nay, per-

ling

Fire

fwading them, that they were not fo much burnt and devour'd by the Fire and Flames as given to, and incorporated with God himself; the Impiety or Cruelty of the Priests was so prevalent. Lucian fays, the Persians Sacrificed to the Fire; which many Greek and Latin Fathers also testifie. Vossius quotes a most remarkable place out of Maximus Tyrius different. 28. All Barbarians have a like Notion of God, tho' they make several representations of him amongst themselves: The Persians by Fire, which is insatiable and devouring, and continues one Day. Fire was carried before the Persian Kings in Holy Vessels, which the Greek called Pyria or Pyranthia, for Pomp, or perhaps rather on a Religious account. Am. Marcel. l. 23. fays, It is reported, if we may give Credit to it, That Fire fell down from Heaven, which they keep continually Burning fill; a small part of it being formerly carried before the Asiatick Kings, in hopes of good Success. But if the Fire of the Persians were of Celestial Original; I cannot fee how it could, or why it should be put out; which, according to Diodorus Siculus, lib. 17. was done at the Death of their Kings. To pass by this as Fabulous, it is very certain that the Persian Priests, or Magi, kept a perpetual Fire in imitation of the Hebrews; and from thence were called Pjrant bi.

From them it went to the Medes and other Asiaick Nations, and the Sauromatæ and others, of which more hereaster. Glycas Annal. 2. mentions this sort of Worship; saying, that the Asyrians were called Persians, from Perseus, the next King after Sardanapalus, and that in his time Fire sell down from Heaven, for which he Built a Temple, and order'd Divine Adoration to be paid to it. Vossius ays, that a Friend of his gives an account of some places in Persia, that worship Fire to this very day.

Fire was antiently Adored in Egypt, by the Name of Vulcan, who according to Chron. Alex. was the Father to King Sol; but I shall not determine any thing concerning this, in regard, the Names of Stars were formerly given to Kings, and those of Kings to Stars. See Manetho, Diod. Siculus, lib. 1. and Eusebius, de Prep. Evang. cap. 1. Cicero lib. 2. de N. D. tells us, that antiently there were very many Vulcans, and he of Egypt was called Opas, efteeming him their Protector. But, according to Varro, Vulcan mystically signifies, the most gross and sierce Fire, such as is used for Forging and in Furnaces. Vesta, and according to some, Pallas, the most light and pure. The Egyptians had a very great veneration for Vulcan, who is called Hephastus by the Greeks; they built him a very large Temple in Memphis, and Erected a Colossus to him of 75 Feet long. His Priests were in such great estimation, that Setho, one of their College, was made King; it was a Custom to burn whatsoever was offer'd in Sacrifice to him. So Tarquinius Priscus, having vanquished the Sabines, burnt all their Arms in Honour of Vulcan. Amongst Animals, Lions were facred to him, for their prodigious Heat, being reported to be generally in a Fever. Dogs also were kept for the prefervation of his Temple.

C

W

R

Fi

H

Vu

lic

Pu

is,

kee

her

on dee

Fire

gre

exp

ther

and

V

Ant

tia,

Fast.

The

es th

Priett

The Romans had many Temples Built for him, the most Antient was that of Romulus without Rome, in the Esquiliae, for a particular secret Reason, that the God who was the Symbol of devouring Fire, might not have a Place in the City. The Sacrifices that were antiently offer'd to Fire, were called Holocaustae, which being perform'd, every thing was reduc'd into Ashes. There was another way of Sacrifice, that what fell from the Altar, or remained after the Sacrifice was over, was distributed by the Chap. X.

0, 9

ht

ti-

s;

Tis

bo,

5 2

fice

hed

of

to

01

101

him,

Rome, that Fire,

rifices d Hog was

ay of

y the

Prieff

Priests to the People, so that it ended in a Feast. There was another also called Protervia, beginning with Feafting, where Macrobius fays, the Custom was, to confume what remained with Fire, to that the Feast ended in a kind of Sacrifice. To this Cato alludes, when he ingeniously exposes Albidius; who having confumed most part of his Estate in Riot and Gluttony, and losing the remainder by Fire, fays, that He bad Celebrated the Protervia. Dioni Hal. lib. 2. 6, 7, 11. tells us, in how great effecti Vulcan was amongst the Antient Romans; the Publick Assemblies meeting in his Temples, Debating Publick Affairs there; for they invoked Vulcan, that is, Fire, to revenge it upon them, if they did not keep their words, fo that what was Transacted here, was esteemed to have a more sacred Sanction than what was done any where elfe. And indeed, if Fear had any prevalency in Religion; Fire was the God that struck the Heathens with the greatest terror; nor, on the other hand, could they expect greater Bleffings in this Life from any other; Fire being capable of doing fo much good and harm.

Vesta, was another Name for Fire amongst the Antient, tho' with some it signifies the Earth. Fire is it is a symbolical Name, was called Vesta, Helia, by the Greeks, as Vulcan Hephastus. So Ovid. 6: Fast.

Vesta is nothing but a Living Flame.

The same Poet also, speaking of Vesta, as she signiies the Earth, says,

The Earth stands by its own Power, and standing by that Power, is called Vesta.

I 2

Dion:

Dion. Hal. lib. 22. endeavours to reconcile both Opinions, and says, that Fire was Dedicated to Vesta because she was the Goddess Tellus, and possessed the middle part of the World. She her self kindles those sublime, shining Fires.

I must here beg leave to dissent from two very Learned Men, Lipfius and Vossius, who would infer from hence, that the Earth affords Fuel for the Ce. lestial Fires, but I cannot see how this can be in. ferr'd from these words: for how is it possible, that the Earth, kindling Fires her felf, being fo very fmall, with respect to so many immense Celestial Bodies, should be able to supply them with Fuel? It would be but very flender, especially, in regard fuch vast quantities of Vapours, that Ascend into the middle Region of the Air, are there condensed into Water, Snow, Hail, Winds, Clouds and Mists, or Fogs, and so either fall down upon the Earth again, or elfe are diffipated in the Air. I must rather here agree with the Learned Cartarius, that Vesta is that more pure Fire, which gives Life to all things that are on the Earth; and therefore, to be diffinguished from that more gross, which was meant by Vulcan. Some of the Moderns declare in favour of Vossius here, but I cannot be of their Opinion; for altho' I know very well, that Vapours afcend to a prodigious Height; yet I cannot allow, that they afford Nutriment to the Sun.

The Worship of both Vulcan and Vesta, was very Antient in Italy; but the Romans had it from the Albans, and they from Enews, and the Trojans, Ovid.

lib. z. Faft.

We see the Pledges of the Trojan Vesta carried than Konder, as reach Vella.

This

I)

fr

In

lic

ot

pl

th

So

Pr

bal

Bu

Vir

car

noi

mu

the fore

the 1 plac

Was

gins

Nun Pluta

Ten

101 esta

out t cord: Vesta

he I

on, t ient

d

es

гу

er

en-

ry

ial

13 ird

the

fed

Its.

erth

ra.

hat

all

be

eant

nout

on;

d to

they

very

the

wid.

arried

This

This is also evident from some Antient Medals, on which is a round Temple of Vesta, and Eneas carrying his Father Anchifes on his Shoulders, having the Palladium (which if you'll believe them, fell from Heaven) in one Hand, and leading his Son Julus in the other, who also carries some sacred Relicks, which agrees with what Dion. Hal. lib. 2. and others affert. Numa was the first that Built a Temple for Vesta, at Rome, and it is generally thought that Romulus forbore to do it, because he was the Son of a Vestal Virgin, by Mars, that is, one of his Priests; or, as Vossius would have it (which is as probable) by a Soldier; therefore he durst not either Build her a Temple, or Punish any of the Vestal Virgins that had violated their Vows, as Dion. Halicarn. fays, left he should put Men in mind of his ignominious Original, tho' Plutarch, in the Life of Romulus, Propertius, lib.4. El.4. and Cic. de Arusp. fays, That the Vestals were introduc'd by Romulus, and therefore he order'd Publick Fires be kept throughout the whole City.

Numa brought them all together to a common place, between the Capitol and Palace, which was committed to the Custody of the Vestal Virgins; they were at first Four, then Six, which Number Dion. Hal. says, continued to his time. Plutarch gives an account of the Building of this Temple. It is reported (says he) that Numa built a round Temple, for keeping the perpetual Fire of Vesta, not to Represent the Earth, as if she was Vesta, but the Nature of the Universe, in whose Centre, according to the Pythagoreans, Fire is Situate, calling it Vesta and Unity; where may be observed how much the Pythagoreans attributed to Fire. I am of Opinion, that the Adoration of Fire was much more Anient and Universal than is generally believed; for, tho' the Heathers Worshipped many other Deities in different places, and had much greater Veneration for them, yet they thought none so quick, present and indifferently undetermin'd as Fire; being always ready to Assist or Hurt, according as it was disposed. Upon this account, Pausanias says, concerning the Sacrifices which were performed in the Olympicks; They Sacrifice first to Vesta, then to Jupiter Olympius. And Servius tell us, that no Sacrifice was without Fire, and that Vesta was invoked in all of them; to which, this of Ovid has relation,

We say, O Vesta, whom we first Adore.

Cicero lib. 2. de N. D. fays, The Power of Vesta appertains to the Altars and Fire-Places, therefore all Prayer and Sacrifice terminates in that Goddess, who keeps the most secret things. In Greece, and the adjacent Countries, this perpetual Fire was kept by certain Widows, which were called Prytannitide. In Italy by Virgins, who were oblig'd by the Law to continue Unmarried for thirty Years, and conftantly faciliced and performed other Ceremonies to the Goddels; in the first ten Years they were to be instructed in her Religious Rites; in the next ten, they were to officiate temfelves, and in the last, they were to in-Bruck others. After this time, if they would by down their Sacerdotal Habit, or Ornaments, it was permitted them to Marry; which our Author fays, yery few did, and those lived very unhappily ever after.

The Laws ordain'd very great Respect and Honour to them; but also inslicted most severe Punishment upon those that were Deslowered: But for the generality, they did preserve their Virginity, and 16

th

go

M

de

fti

th

24

th

th

T

or

83

In

m

Sta

El

Fl

an

Bu

an att

ho

the

on

C.]

at

me

fins

bei

n

nt

d.

ne

is.

to

r-

be

n-

i-

by

ue

fi-

in to

n.

a.y

Vas

ys,

191

10-

h-

the

nd

the

the easier, because it was unlawful for any Man to go into their Temple in the Night. Dion. Hal. tells us, that Emilia and Tatia, two of them, wrought Miracles. There were feveral fecret Sacred things deposited in her Temple, which only her Domeflicks and the Virgins knew of; amongst which was the Palladium mention'd before, and the God Facinus, whose beaffly Image the Vestals Worshipped, that they might cure Children of a Diffemper of that Name, when it was hung about their Neck. They had Power to detain Fugitive Slaves that were not got out of the City, by a certain Prayer, or Charm, whose Efficacy had been approv'd by 830 Years Experience, according to Pliny. In the 609th Year of the City, Tatia, a Vestal, accused of Incest, carried water in a Sieve, as Pliny fays, and many fuch like Stories. Q. Cecilius Martellus, had a Statue Erected for him in the Capitol, with an Elogy, for faving those Sacred things out of the Flames.

Pausanias in Corinth. and Ovid. in Fast. say, that antiently there was no Image of Vesta.

Vesta, or Fire, then no Image had.

But the Image of Vesta is upon Antient Medals, and a Fire-Place in her Temple, where the Virgins attended, cloth'd in long and square Sussibulums, holding a Incense-pot in one Hand, and a Chalice in the other. M. Choul exhibits to us a very Antient one of this fort. Agellius and Alexander ab Alexandro c. 18. informs us, that the number of the Vestals was at last increased to Twenty; whereas Ambrosius mentions only Seven, as we have it from J. Lipsius, who questions whether they were that number.

She

She that was first taken, or chosen by the Pontifex, was called Amata, and the chief, Maxima; as appears by an Antient Inscription of Fl. Monilia. Their Hair was carried to the Lote-Tree, according to Pliny; perhaps, because this Tree was Sacred to Juno, who was called Lucina, from a Grove of Lote-Trees. Because the Vestals did renounce Marriage, therefore they offer'd up these Spoils to Juno Promuba, before the Pontifex admitted them into the College. Festus gives an account of their being Shaved; The Vestals were Shaved when the Pontisex received them into that Sacred College, and Consecrated them by a certain Verse, or Charm, and they were Devoted to the Gods.

The Publick defray'd the Charge of the Publick Fire they kept; whenever that Fire went out, they put something, that was easie to kindle, in a small hollow Vessel, which took Fire by the Sun-Beams, that United in its Centre, as Plutarch testifies. If this Fire accidentally went out, it Prognosticated some publick Calamity; and whenever that happen'd, they sorbore to transact any Civil Affairs, and to dispense Justice, till a solemn Atonement was instituted. But it it did not go out, it was new kindled every Year, on the Calends of March.

The Vestal Rites were almost abolish'd, with the Vestals themselves, in the time of Theodosius Junior; notwithstanding the great Intercession made by Symmachus, on their behalf; who Prognosticated that an Universal Famine, and great Dearth in all the Provinces would ensue; saying, it was impossible but they must all Perish, because all Religion was in contempt amongst them. To whom Prudentius, describing the Vestals of that Age, Replies:

he

Chap. X.

d

C

ę

11 n n

d

Drown'd in deep Grief we are, who live to see, Vestals Chast Rites, thus in contempt to be, Palladium's naked, th' Virgins shrink with Cold; Their Fire's extinguish'd now, deny'd of Gold.

Afterwards describing what course of Life they led, he says:

The Vestals Chastity, I here will Sing, Devoted Virgins in their Blooming Spring, And severe Laws prescrib'd to keep them so, Forbidden what their Wishes prompt them to. E'er yet their Minds thro' tender Age can chuse, What's for their good, or for their harm refuse. Before their Natures, and their Wills are Strong, Justly to think, or judge of Right and Wrong; Or how th' Affections with the Body grow, The Self-denying doom they undergo. In Blooming Youth and Innocence betray'd, To Curfed Altars, thus are Victims made. With false Ideas of true Virtue fill'd, To Loath the Marriage-Bed, in them's instill'd; And honestly to gratifie their Sense, Is to be guilty of Incontinence. Inspir'd with Chastity's bright Specious Name, They Starve themselves, to Feed a Lifeles Flame. Suppres their tender Natural Desires, T attend with Zeal, the Superstitious Fires: And, thro the notion of a Rite Divine, To Barren Age, they watch th' enlightn'd Shrine.

But ab! How curst is the stale Virgins State, When 'tis unwillingly their wretched Fate; They no Restraint, whilst Immature, can grieve, Nor want of Bliffes which they can't conceive. But Passions Ripen'd once to fierce Desire, Then Probibitions but increase the Fire : Debarr'd of Joys they seemingly despise, What don't they suffer thro' this forc'd disguise? What Conflicts feel compell'd to act the Saint? The Flesh like Surges, rifing by constraint. What Thoughts impure, the Bodies truly Chaft, On restles Beds their Teeming time they waste; Nor e'er despair of the dear long'd for Bliß, Quench bot Desire, and make their Torments less. In vain they wish, like Tantalus in vain, The beauteous Prospect but augments their Pain. Frustrate their Hopes t' attend the Sacred Fires, And grow decrepit e'er their Charge Expires. Worn out at length with Irksome Virgin Pains, Our Vestal feeks Relief in Hymen's Chains; Would fain, the Old, the Marriage Pleasure prove; Foys, which she seem'd to scorn whilst fit for Love. The Sapless Wretch, not longer much to live, Gainst Nature, would ber, mispent Time relieve. Loathing the odious Name of a Stale Maid, She Weds, when for her Office too Decay'd; Then Doating, strives for Bliss with faded Charms, And Hugs ber frightned Spouse with Mummy Arms. In vain the claps her Wither'd Cheeks to bis, With Beldam Looks, and many a Tastles Kis; All Joys are with ber Youthful Beauty fled, Who scarce is Luke-warm in her Bridal-Bed.

When sacred Mitre binds ber scatter'd Hair, And for these Sacred Rites, they ber prepare; In Publick State, thro the admiring Groud The Glorious Virgin's carried, who aloud Proclaims the Crimes of the amazed Throng. Then the retires both Innocent and Young. Unto her Cell, to glut her Holy Eyes With Blood and Slaughter, bear the dismal Crys Of mangled and expiring Combatants Attir'd with all ber sacred Ornaments. This tender Wretch! rejoyces at the found Of Clashing Weapons, when the fatal Wound Is given, then she crys, how charming is't? Bidding them thump his Breast with clenched Fist. Until be quite expire, and cannot find The least remains of Life are left behind. But here's their Merit; they do Watch and Pray, For Rome's Profperity both Night and Day; Preserve the Lives of the mean vulgar Sort, Procure Prosperity for those at Court; Their Heads in strange mysterious ways attire, And Sacrifice in Subterraneous Fire, With dismal tones, for to such Rites as these; Ghofts only are admitted Witnesses.

Then Subjoins.

August Ausonian General we Pray; These Wretched Rites, with thothers take away. I have quoted this, to shew my Reader how much the Vestals in that Age had Degenerated from the former. For further information, see Justus Lipsius, Syntag. de Vest. and Vestal. where he shews how extensive the Worship of Vesta, or the most pure Fire, or, as I rather believe, of God in the Fire; grew, that it was carried into the very Indies. Lea Africanus, says, that Fire was Worshipp'd in Africa to this very day; and perpetual Fire kept, according to the Custom of the Vestals. Many Authors affert, the same is also observed in the East and West-Indies.

So much for Fire, under the Names of Vulcan and Vesta, for I cannot spare time to discourse of their Temples and sacred Rites; or whether Tubal-Cain was Vulcan, or insert the various Opinions of Grammarians concerning the Etymology of the word. I have insisted long enough on the Adoration of Fire, and those things that have a relation unto it. I come now to the Air, intending elsewhere to treat of the manner of Purgation by Fire, used amongst the Heathens.

Of the A I R.

A fter the occult Operations of Heaven, and the apparent of Fire, nothing hath such an universal Instruction over all Sublumary things, as Air. Its Parts being so Tenuious and Adapted for Motion, that it touches, encompasses and penetrates all things about us; wherefore it is impossible but it should differently affect us, according to the Diversity of its Temperature and Qualities.

In this Element therefore, as in a large Field, Heaven having stor'd up the Seminal Causes of things, and they being received by the Winds and

Rain,

Rai

on foli

fon

tati

ticu

lap

ved

COL

or ( oth

due

on any

eve

ous

He:

the

fom

dov

My

cred

thei to i

cial. with

and it fe

Aug

Hea

Air,

is w

us,

infe

Opi

Н

Rain, generated in its middle Region, descend upon the Earth, where being clothed with a more folid Body, by its Power and Affiftance, produce fomething Visible; which, for certain Celestial Rotations, continue to perform their proper and particular Functions amongst us. This time being elapfed, and the Contexture of their Bodies dissolved, they return to their Original place (which, according to the Antient Philosophers, is called Hades, or Orcus) to perform new Periods there, or in some other place, after a limited time. For being endued with a plastick Power, they do not Operate on one Element only, but, like Statuaries, Form any Matter into what Figure they pleafe. Whereever they are, they are active, constant and affiduous, in performing their natural Functions. Heaven and Earth are constantly Trafficking in these Airy Regions, as at a Publick Fair or Mart, fome things being received up, and others fent down, by way of Exchange. But in regard this Mysterious Philosophy will meet with very little credit amongst the Vulgar; I shall proceed no further in it, and observe Quintilian's Advice, never to infift long upon things not Substantial or Beneficial. This notwithstanding, is undeniable; that without Air, Men would be Deaf, Blind and Dumb, and could not subsist one Moment; nor even Fire it felf. The World, according to Varro, fays, (S. Aug. de Civ. Dei, Cap. 8. is divided into two Parts, Heaven and Earth, and the Heaven is Ather and Air, the Nourisher of all things. From this Air, it is we draw the Breath that Preserves and Refreshes us, and likewise Contagious Distempers, when it is infected.

.

n

e, ld

n

ir.

1-ıll

it

)j-

d,

of

nd

n,

Here it must be observed, that, according to the Opinion of the Antients, there was very little difference

ab

bo va

mi

fec

thi

my

Pu

fut

on

De

Ean

tha

the

the

to 1

the

Bra

of t

the

will

Glo

Prie

man

Mile

tien

Firm

of th

ment

bath

The

Greei

1

rence between Ather and Air; and in their Mystical Philosophy, Jupiter and Minerva were promiscu-ously used for both. So Ocellus, Nature and Generation govern all things; which, according to their common opinion, is to be understood, that the Ather was more noble than the Air; but the Air, with respect to us, was nearer and more beneficial: Yet it must not be denied, that many New things are generated in the Ather, as we have proved before; and the Chronicles of Ferrara tell us, that betwixt Seven and eight at Night, a Star of fuch Splendour and Magnitude appeared, that the Heaven feem'd in a Conflagration; from whence some conclude, that the Ather and Air are very near of the same Nature, and both of them the Subjects of Generation and Corruption, but those in the Air more frequent. The Ather, in its own Nature, is most Energetical; but the Air is naturally more Cognate and Agreeable, continually Drawing it in, and Breathing it out; and so familiar an Element to us, that it approaches our very Heart. Neither Astronomers, nor the Learned in Opticks, have determined any thing certain concerning the Magnitude or Extension of this Element: For having recourse to Mathematical Instruments, to observe the Magnitude and Distance of the Æther and Air, and the Celestial Bodies, they run into many Errors, as I shall shew.

And here Aftronomers first suppose, that their Centres coincide with that of the World, tho they are distant an intire Semidiameter of the Earth, which is the true cause of this mistake, for Fr. Patric. proves the Earth is not a Point, in respect of the Heaven, but a proportional Quantity.

Another Error proceeds from supposing, that by their Instruments, they observe half the Heaven above

iome-

above the Horizon, which is impossible, considering both the Sights thro' which they observe, and the various position of the Eye. The Density also of the lower Air, and the purity of the Superiour, the multitude of Mists and Clouds, every were dispersed, must cause various Refractions; and thus the thickness and inequality of the Medium, occasions as great Error, as the uncertainty of the distance.

These things I have treated of more largely in my Book de Veritate, and also in another not yet Publish'd, de Errorum Causis. I could also here confute Astronomers, by the Doctrine of Opticks, but shall only Explain the common Notions, concerning the Density of the Air. Vitellio's Opinion is, that the Earth is distant near 51 M. P. from the Clouds, and that the Air doth not extend above 200 M. P. from thence he computes the Atistotle fays, that the Air is an hundred times larger than the Earth; to which if we should add the imaginary Extent of the Æther (as some describe it) according to Tycho Brahe's computation, they will be 52 Semidiameters of the Earth, which he makes the Distance between the Superficies of the Earth and the Moon, and then it will be an hundred Thousand times larger than this Globe of Earth and Water.

Air was not only accounted a Deity by the Priests, and the ignorant part of Mankind, but by many of the Philosophers, particularly Anaximenes, Milesus and Diogenes Apolloniates. The Asyrians antiently Worshipp'd it, and some amongst the Africans. Firmicus, lib. Prof. Rel. says, The Assyrians and part of the Inhabitants of Africa esteem'd the Air an Element, and pay it an imaginary Veneration, and attribute both the Names of Juno and Venus the Virgin to it. The Egyptians, by Minerva, meant the Air. The Greeks and Romans (according to many Writers?)

e

d

is

h

es

n,

by

en

Ve

fometimes represented it by Jupiter, sometimes by Juno; sor, believing that there was Male and Female in the Air, as in all things that have Life, they called the Superiour Jupiter, and the Inseriour Juno. So Seneca, They esteem'd that the Male Air, in which the Wind was; That Female, which was slow and cloudy. Thus much concerning the Air, and its Adoration under the Name of Juno.

Of WATER.

HE Heathens Ador'd Water also, believing all things had their Original from it, because it was more capable of Condensation and Rarefaction than any other Element, and by reason of this Vicistitude, things sometimes appearing, and at other times disappearing, they paid Divine Honour to it, as a certain Deity, or Principle, tho' not to its External Body or Matter, but to an Internal Divine Power or Virtue, Operating in it. Thus Cicero, lib. 1. de N. D. fays, Thales, who first made a Disquisition into things of this nature, made Water the Original Matter of all things, and God the Soul or Mind, that formed them out of it. How much Water conduces to the production of Vegetables, is very evident from an Eminent Instance in the beginning of this The Antients were of Opinion, that the feminal Causes of things were in the Sea, Rivers, Fountains and Lakes, as well as in the Air, and the Rain-Water contain'd in it.

Some were of opinion that not only Brutes, as Horses, Cows, Hogs and Dogs, but Mankind, both Male and Female, did proceed from the Sea, in regard some Sea-Fish seem to represent their Form and Figure; which Paradox they endeavour to maintain, by afferting, When those sort of Animals creep nut

ou

gre

he

Ele

at

fuc

the

An

all hav

Op

us t

of

con

and

qui

con

war

ng

or I

PPD

eed

kind

N

nore

ass

er.

here

fire.

ofe

he

office

ca

ECO

0

t-

res

nt

nis

he rs, he

as

re-

and

ineep

out

full

out of the Sea, and get on Shore, Nature, by degrees, furnishes them with proper Organs to Live here, like Amphibious Animals, removed from one Element to another, by the affiftance of Nature : at last these Off-springs of the Sea had Speech, and fuch Members as we have, and by degrees, changed their Pristine Shape, which also happen'd in other Animals; and that this might not feem new, or firange, they allege, that it supplies Necessaries to all that live on this Globe of Earth. I should not have mentioned this unaccountable and monftrous Opinion, but that Antient Philosophy hath given us no tolerable account of the Original Production of Man; and it is most certain, that Water does contribute very much to the Generation of Man. and all other things. The Humidum Radicale is requir'd as much, and perhaps more than Heat, to compose a compleat Man; and we oftner Die for want of Natural Moisture, than by the extinguishing our Heat. This Humidity confifts in an Oily or Balfamick Substance, not in a Watry; for that oppugns and destroys the Heat, whereas the Oily leeds and supports it; tho' Worship was paid to all kind of Moisture, under the notion of Water only.

When we consider the Parts of this Element nore particularly, the Sea first occurs; which Danswins proves, by many solid Arguments, to encompass the whole Earth, to whom I refer my Reader. Upon this Hypothesis, I cannot conceive that here can be so great a quantity of Subterranean fire, as is generally believed. It must also be supposed, that the Earth is sull of Caverns, thro which he Water passes and repasses, according to what solids says was the Opinion of Mariners, that the ca was rarely above half an Italian Mile deep, accepting some sew Whirlpools only, which are a

n

ſe

A

R

its

it

W

Sp

the

Do

tail

Sea

pro

Wal

whi

lend

how to fi

ceed

of (

Orie

T

cern

alhe

ICCO

Mod

ion

the]

for a t fo

imes

inace

arts

lagn

ling

full Mile, and others not to be Sounded, as about the Isles of Flanders, and others, in the Pacifick Sea. The Length and Breadth of the Sea, doth equal. if not exceed that of the Earth, separate from the Sea; if we compute it by what is known of the World here, confult Alex. Piccollominaus, who hath wrote particularly on this Subject. Authors give two particular Reasons for the Saltness of the Sea. 1. That the Sun exhales all the tresh Parts of the Water. 2. When these fresh Parts are separated the others become Adust. But then great Rivers and Lakes also should be so; the Tenuity of River Water being no obstruction, for the Sun's Influence will be more powerful on them; nor that it is not fo deep, for the nearer any Water is to the Earth, the fooner its thicker Parts become Adust. If this were true, then it would follow also, that the Sea was not Salt from the beginning, but became foin tract of Time, which I cannot fee how it can be proved. The only cause that I conceive, is, the wonderful Universal Providence, which gave it a Saline quality, and endued it with Motion by it Ebbing and Flowing, to adapt it to the Nature of those Animals that live in it; for if that vast quantity of Sea-Water were fresh and motionless, as Lakes are, I question not but the whole Air would be Contagious and Infected. He therefore that 16quires any other Reason hereof, may as well ask, why Fire is Hot, Earth Solid and Dry, and things of the like nature; for they are the immediate production of Nature it felf, and not otherwise to known, but in their own Principles; tho' the Ed bing and Flowing of the Sea, do so exactly cor respond with the various Motions of the Moon, to give Philosophers good Grounds to conjecture its Original proceeded from thence. There is no thin

3

15

9

10

h,

115

ea

in

be

the

t 1

15

e d

an

akes

be

16-ask,

nings

pro-

Eb-

COL

n, 2

ecture

is no

thin

thing feems more strange, than that the Sea should neither grow fresher nor fuller, notwithstanding the vast confluence of Rivers that have emptied themselves into it for so many Ages; for if, according to Arifforle, all Rivers tend to the Sea, as their common Receptacle; yet, why should they neither change its Tafte, nor increase its Magnitude; and how comes it to pals, that Fountains and Rivers are fresh? Nor will it be a fufficient Answer, that Rivers and Springs dispersed every where about, do pass thro' the Subterraneous Caverns of the Earth, and are Dulcified by degrees; their Motion being uncermin, curv'd and flow, whereas Rivers hafte to the Sea by a rapid impetuolity; fo that there can be no proportion betwixt those difficult passages that the Water has thro the occluse Pores of the Earth, by which it becomes fresh, and the Precipitous Violence of Rivers. But the inquisitive Sciolist, to shew how accurately he pries into Nature, will endeavour to find out second Causes for those things which proceed directly and folely from the most wife Countel of God, which establish'd them for the first and Original Perfection of things.

There is something worthy our Observation concerning this imperuous Motion of the Sea, which ashes its Shores on all sides, rising and falling, and, according to Pliny, Purging its self every Full Moon. Moderns are of Opinion, that this Reciprocal Motion of the Sea, is caused by the Diurnal Motion of the Earth, but this meets with many Objections. For allowing the Earth's Diurnal Motion, how will tolve the Ebbing and Flowing of the Sea, seventimes in 24 Hours; there are also exotick and maccountable. Tides in many Seas, in different Parts of the World. Our Water here, must seem to sagnate to some, especially at Ausser in Liber-

K 2

nia.

h

ha

A

18

of

in

of

kn

the

froi

this

the

Nor

thar

by peri

Bott

prob

Rain

Moi

T

to th

make

ind

ho' i ndies

ime

n el

ver

tick (

nia, where the Sea Ebbs and Flows above 20 times a Day. This will not in the least solve the Diurnal, Weekly, Monthly, every three Months, half Year, and Annual Motions of the Sea, for fuch great Variety is found in it by observation. There are yet more and greater Difficulties occur, if we endeayour to folve this Reciprocal Motion of the Sea by the Moon, especially, what Augustus Casarens Reports, that the Moon being South-West or South, then it was High-water; when it was in the East or North West, then it was Low-Water; and on the contrary, the Moon being in the latter, it was High-Tide in the Mediterrean, and Low-water at the former. The Reason whereof, no Person ever yet pretended to Deduce, either from the Diurnal Motion of the Earth or the Moon. Neither, according to Aristotle, will the Sun's Exhaling and Agitating great quantities of Winds anfwer thefe objections, or the Situation and Figure of the Shores and Bottom; the Decursion and Regurgitation of the Ocean, or its Imitation of the Heavens in its circular Motion, the great Rocks and Sands that are cast up in it, the Moon's ascending to the Meridian, or its descending to the Welf, or any other of her Politions or Motions, can afford us nothing fatisfactory. I proceed to the Saltness of the Sea; Salt boyl'd, is more Hot than other Water; from whence it is probable, that the Cuffian Sea is very Calm, having Eighty Rivers, and five Lakes running into it, which dulcifie its Water; another Caufe may be its Rarefaction in Flowing, and Condensation in Ebbing. I have proved by many Instances, that the Ebbing and Flowing of the Sea, cannot proceed folely from the Moon, for then all Waters would fuffer the fame Mutation (as Firt burns all Combustible Matter) how comes it to pals,

e

d

f,

15

n. X-

n-

10

e-

of

cks

en-

eft,

ord

alt-

0.

the

and

an-

and nany

Sea,

then

Fire

it to pals,

quicker

pass also, that it is not at the fame time every where, and that it should happen to our Antipodes, when the Moon doth not appear to them; that the greatest Tides should be at the New as well as Full, and not in any of the intermediate Times ; her Appearance being always greater than at the New, it might rationally be supposed, she should have the greater influence. These amongst other Arguments are fufficient to evince, that the Moon is not the fole Cause of the Ebbing and Flowing of the Sea, but my Defign will not permit me to infift longer on this Subject. This Reciprocation of the Sea, is also two-fold, one of which was unknown to the Antients, who generally Coafted on the Shore, and very rarely put to Sea. The first is from the North to the South, for they Sail sooner from this Point to the Opposite, than on the contrary; therefore, tho' each have as fair Winds, Danes and Norwegians will make a quicker Voyage to England, than the English can thither. So we Sail sooner by much to Spain, than they can hither; this Experience proves: But whether it proceeds from the Bottom of the narrow North Seas, or which is more probable, from the Rapid Torrents of Snow and Rain, which make Inundations in that Frigid and Moist Zone, I shall not determine.

There is another Motion observable from the East to the West; Sailors will tell you, that they can make a Voyage from Spain to America in a Month, and are Three or Four coming Home; which no it may be occasion'd by the Winds, in the Westndies, Blowing constantly (for some stated ime) from the East, yet the Sea is certainly upon the Declivity, from the East to the West. This very Observable also in the Mediterrenean, Adriatick Gulph, and the Euxine, for the Passage is much quicker from any Ports near Egypt, or Phanicia to Spain, than back again. Also they Sail much sooner from the Philippine or Molucca Islands, to the Cape of Good Hope, than from thence to either of the other Places; but whether this proceeds from the Declivity of the Sea, its Flowing and Ebbing on those Coasts, or by the Impetuosity of the Rivers that come from the East and South, I shall leave my Reader to judge. To conclude this Discourse of the different Motions of the Sea; as foon as the Antients knew any of them, they immediately paid Adoration unto it, and the rather (as Pling faith) because the Wonders of Nature are no where fo conspicuous. I proceed now to its Inhabitants, who far exceed all other Animals in Magnitude, Of this fort are all the Ceteaceous kind; amongst whom the Whale, Grampus, Physiter, Orca, Prifes, and Scolopendra Marina, were known to the Antients: but there have been many more kinds, lately discover'd about Island, and other Parts of the North Sea, and the Indies. As far as I can find, the great Leviathan was known to the Jews only, tho' I question whether the Rabbins have left us any Description of it.

n

th

fr

fp

ar

pe

th

pa

Fre

Ba

tha

que

the

oth

but

pro

the

due

Flu

mu

oth

par

dea

mu

There are several Reasons may be given, why Fish should exceed all other Animals in Magnitude, i. They are composed of a moister Substance, i. They have their Food always about them. 3. They live to a very great Age, never any Person yet found a Fish Dead with Age. Gallileus gives us very good Reason, why the Sea produces Animals of such vast Dimensions, beyond Terrestial because in the Terrestial, the Bones sustain the Flesh, in the others the contrary. For if the Flesh of Whales did not (like Cork) support their Rib and Bones, their own Weight would Sink them where wherefore, when by any Tempest they are driven on the Sands, or by chance come into a shallow Sea, not being able to spring up and get off for their vast Bulk, are left there a Prey.

5

of

e

y

ny

18

s,

e.

es,

in-rib

eat

oti-

hy

Ide.

2.

hey

yet

115 4

Ini-

ial;

the

lell

Rib

em!

ero

There formerly were, and now are, many Teflaceous and Crustaceous Animals in this Element, which seem the Luxuriant Sport of the Works of Nature, and deservedly attract the Admiration of the most Speculative Part of Mankind; seeming to proceed from an informing Power, naturally belonging to the Sea it self, upon which account the Heathens thought it deserved to be Honour'd with no small Adoration.

The miraculous Works of Nature, are no less conspicuous in fresh Water; some Common Water wets and mollifies, and other not only hardens Chalk, but petrifies Wood, there being a Theatre Built of fuch Stones. Some Waters appear of all Colours, others are of all Tastes, some quench Fire, others, particularly, those that are betwixt Bononia and Frenzvolam, shine like Fire against Rain. Some Bath-Waters are very Hot, and others are so Cold, that they extinguish the natural Heat. Some again quench Thirst; but others, particularly these near the Sea, increase it. Some are altogether Insipid, others are Impregnated, not only with the Tafte, but Virtue of all Fossils or Minerals. Some provoke Urine, and expel Gravel and Stones from the Bladder, others generate them. Some are endued with a Purgative faculty, others frop the Flux. Some are good for the Eyes, others are as much Prejudicial. Some cleanse and whiten Wool, others give it a new Tincture. Near some Waters, particular Trees will thrive and flourish, which decay and wither near others; only Fish that are mute will live in some Water, and others breed nothing

te

fu

B

cl

A

fu

aı

B

fie

P

e

m fu

F

R

m

m

be ra

Pifu

W

ci

R F

gr

47

but Croaking Frogs. Some Waters make Men Sober and Abstemious, whilst others intoxicate them. Some make Men run Mad, and others reduce them to their right Senses, by removing one of the greatest Symptoms, Exorbitant, Lascivious desires; if we may credit what is related of the Fountain of Cyriscus. Some whet the Wit and improve the Memory, others make Men stupid and forgetful, an account of all which may be seen in Pliny, Strabo, Vitruvius, and others.

To conclude, Nature cannot furnish us with another Recipe, so Beneficial or Destructive, but Water it felf may be found to perform the same,

Much might here be faid of Snow and Rain-Wa. ter, but it is not to my present purpose: Tho' I cannot omit the Reason which the Learned Vossius gives, why fome Springs Increase and Decrease with the Sea, The Water (fays he) which is near to the Sea, and proceeds from it in direct Veins and Paffages, is Affected as the Sea it felf is; but on the contrary, that which runs thro' various Meanders, and a long way; for before it can come into the Well, if it were High-Water at Sea, it then is Ebb, and if it were the lowest Ebb, it may be High Water. Here many Difficulties arise; for in some Parts of the World, particularly in this Island, there are Springs and Wells that correspond with the Motion of the Sea, some Rifing, and others Falling at the same time with it; as Vossius hinted. But if the Sea should have immediate Communication with these Springs or Wells, by subterraneous Passages, I see no reason that they should continue fresh; and likewise, if some Springs and Wells had this fecret Correspondence, why not all, or when some Rise, others should Fall. With deference therefore to so great a Man, it is my 0pinion, that the Air is Agitated by fome fecret Pores

S

y

ot

h

)-

es at at the beginning of Flood, and afterwards the Water, till it swell up and Rise, and then Falls down and fublides by the same degrees, as the Sea retires. But, I suppose it quite otherwise, in those Springs and Wells, whose Motion is opposite to that of the Sea; for in that Case, I conceive some very narrow Pores or Passages between them and the Sea, but closed up at that end next the Sea, and so full of Air, that it will cause the Water in the Spring or Well to Rife, for there may be in a ftreight Tube, fuch a proportion of Air to Water, that may move and expel it; but when the Sea Rifes upon a Sandy Bank, and fit to give it Reception, being nigh the fide of one of these subterraneous Pores, begins gradually to infinuate it felf into these Pores, and to possess it felf of the place of the inclosed Air, and expels it thro' the Pores of the Earth, into another more remote side, and so the Water that before was supported by the Air, falls by degrees; but as the Sea Falls, the Air returns into its former Station, and Raifes the Water up again by the fame degrees.

The probability of this is evident from several Pneumatick Experiments; but I shall not presume to determine any thing in so abstruct a Matter, my Design being to shew, that there were many things so miraculous in Water, that occasioned the Heathens to pay it divine Adoration, especially, being so useful an Element, and always at Hand.

The Egyptians were the first, as Athanasius, who was one of that Country, testifies; saying, Some Ador'd Rivers and Fountains, but the Egyptians especially Worshipped Water, and called it a God. The River Nile, was in greatest esteem amongst them, Jul. Firm. says, The Inhabitants of Egypt perceiving the great Advantages they received from Water, Worshipp'd, and put up Prayers and Petitions unto it. Many Water-Animals were held Sacred amongst them, and a fort of Fish, which was Scaly, and the Eel, Herodot. lib. 2. The mystical Name of Water, amongst the Egyptians, was Ofiris or Siris, especially the Nile, as Plutarch fays: For Ofiris, which fignifies the first Principle of all good, was the Sun in Heaven, and Water upon Earth, particularly the Nile; which ought not to feem strange, for (as Cartarius observes) the fame God, fignifies often different things, and on the contrary, different Names are often applied to the same thing; which I conceive, proceeds from the Priests Explaining their Mysteries in different Countries, according to their own Interest and Humour, or to make them Intelligible to the People; this ought to be constantly consider'd, or else it would be impossible to understand Ethnical Theology. Canopus, one of Menelaus's Mariners, but afterwards Transform'd into a Star, fignified Water, amongst the Egyptians; whose Priests, by an ingenious Trick, not only excell'd, but totally extinguish'd the God of the Persians and Chaldeans, as we have it in Rufin. Eccl. Hist. and Suidas; for they and the Neighbouring Nations, Proclaiming Fire the Great Ged, because it consumed all forts of Materials, and Exercis'd a Despotick Power over them: The Priest of Canopus, being not well pleas'd with it, contriv'd this Stratagem; He gets Hydria, which was the Figure representing Canopus, made Hollow, and full of small Holes in the Bottom; this he fills with Water, and stops the Holes up with Wax, and so brings forth his Watry Deity: His Adversaries, secure of Victory, make a Fire under Hydria, but the Wax foon melted, and the Water ran out, and prefently extinguish'd the Fire; but whether the Event ended in a Jest, or had a Religious Success, is not so evident, tho it is very manifest, that the Priests of the Magi, Magi, held that Fire and Water were the Principles of all things. Vitruvius Proem. lib. 8. where he also fays, The Priests, according to the Customs of the Egyptians, shew that all things proceed from Liquids. When they cover Hydria, which is carried to the Temple, with the most profound Devotion imaginable, they proftrate themselves on the Ground, and lifting their Hands up to Heaven, render thanks for the productions of Divine Benignity. Thus much of the Adoration of Fresh Waters, especially, the Nile. They had fuch an awful Veneration for the Sea, by the Name of Typho, that they would admit of no Salt upon their Tables, because it was his Froth, nor offer to Salt any Fish, because they were his Inhabitants, and should incur his severe Displeasure by it; nay, they even abominated Sailors, because they used the Seas; but whether this were on account of their terrible apprehension of the Deluge, or for any other reason, I shall not here enquire into.

The Egyptians took this Deity for the Neptune of the Greeks, whom their Neighbours the Lybians Worshipped by the Name of Pelasgus. But they did not pay any Divine Honours to Neptune, concluding, both of the merciles Sea, and inexorable necessity of Fate, tho they were Deities, yet that no Supplications ought to be made unto them.

10

10

Her. lib. 1. Strabo lib. 15. Cl. Alex. Admon. ad Gent. Arnob. lib. 6. and others, tell us, that the Persians paid Divine Worship to Water also, and held it impious to make Urine, Spit, or cast any nasty thing, or, so much as wash their Hands in any Running Stream, as I said before. Corn. Tacitus says, it was esteem'd very irreligious, to Spit into the Sea, or to contaminate it with any thing, tho' never so substructed to Humane Necessary. If this Custom was obserobserved by those that make long Voyages, it would occasion a great mortality amongst the Sailors, for nothing doth more contribute to preserve them in Health, than Cleanliness. The Persians Sacrificed Horses, but more especially, White to Water, which I conceive was done, in Honour of Neptune, of which, I shall give an account hereafter.

The Atergatis of the Assyrians, according to Vossius, had a reference to Water. But this feems very much strain'd, for not long before, he tells us, we are to understand whatsoever is subject to the Power of the Sun by it; and from thence collects, in regard the Sun hath an influential Power over the Moon, and the Moon over the Water, therefore Atergatis might have reference to Water, but this is a very weak way of Arguing, for by the same Reason, it may be extended to the Air and Earth, and very many other things under the Solar influence, as well as Water. He adds, this is evident by the Figure, which was a Woman upwards, and a Fish below, and the Name Atergatis fignifies a great and excellent Fish. The Priests eat broil'd and boil'd Fish in the Presence of their Goddess, in Honour of her. But tho' her Figure was a Woman above, and a Fish beneath, there is no consequence, that she must therefore fignifie Water, or have any relation to the Adoration of it. If he had told us, that tho' the Woman was not Worshipped, yet the Fish was, he had not fo much impos'd on us, as, that Atergatis fignifies a great and excellent Fish. Also if Atergatis were a Fish, it is strange, that her Priests should eat Fish in her Presence, for it will be hard to find any of the Antients, that ever boil'd and eat their Gods, and pretended it was done in Honour of them. I rather incline to depend on the Authority of Macrobius, and that Atergatis fignifies, neither Water, nor

n

e

tl

W

th

ac

L

1e

10 ce

D

lea

nor an excellent Fish, but the Earth, as its Effigies, according to his Description, confirms; and I am the rather of this Opinion, because the Assirians were so far from eating of Fish, that they resused to catch them, as Vossius himself says, lib. 2. cap. 36. The most probable Conjecture is; Atergatis, a Queen of Syria, put out an Edict, that no Persons should eat Fish, because she loved them so intirely her self, upon which account her Priests only, afterwards, in imitation of her, eat broil'd and boil'd Fish before her Statue, whilst the Spectators gazed on with Hungry Bellies. However it was, I cannot easily see, how these Contradictions in Vossius can be reconciled. But enough of this.

I make not the least doubt, that the Assyrians Worshipped Water, as well as other Elements, tho' not by the Name of Atergatis. Nor is Vossius any more successful in his Proofs, that Water was intended by the Dagon of the Inhabitants of Palestine; tho' this Image was supposed to be half Man and half Fish, yet there is no consequence, that Water was worshipp'd. My Opinion is, that these Rites had their Original from a certain Fable; Atergatis, or, according to some, Derceto, casting her self into a Lake near Ascalon, abounding with Fish, was preserved by the Fish, and at last Metamorphiz'd into one; nor is it in the least improbable, that the Villanous Priests imposed some such Story as this, concerning their Dagon, upon the Populace, see Seld, de Dif. Syris.

But whether Euronyme, who was esteem'd the Daughter of Oceanus, and had the same Statue as Atergatis, or Derceto; as also the Sirens, may contribute any thing to Elucidate this Matter; I shall leave to the enquiry of others. Some were of Opinion, that she was Diana, vid. Pausan, that Deity was Worship-

if

ts

d

at

of

ot

er,

10

Worshipped by the Pitigalenses, that Inhabited Arcadia, her Temple was open every Day, and Publick and Private Adoration paid unto her.

Water had antiently, both Masculine and Feminine Names; which for the better understanding of their Hiltory, it will be necessary to observe, as usual in the Names of most of the Gods: so in Sacred Scripture, Josh. 46. 8. the Female Sex, seems to be given to the God of the Hebrews; for which, amongst others, consult the Learned Licetus, lib. de quasitis per Epistolas; amongst the Names of Waters, the Ocean obtains the Principal Place: The Antients esteem'd him the Father of the Gods. so Homer, The Ocean Father of Gods, Tethys the Mother. Moses also fays, that Water was created the first Day; to this, fomething that has been hinted before, may be referred. The Images of Oceanus and Neptune, were not much unlike, but Oceanus was esteemed the Elder, and Neptune's Grand-Father; Vossius says, that Oceanus fignified the exterior, and Neptune the interior Sea, or all Watry Humours in general. The Worshipping of the Ocean, is deliver'd in Justin. lib. 12. When Alexander bad subdu'd the City, be returned to bis Ships, and offer'd Sacrifice to the Ocean. The Greeks called the Sea Poseidon, and the Romans, Neptune. Herod. lib. 7. fays, Sacrifices were offer'd to Neptune the Deliverer. The same Author mentions a Temple of his amongst the Patidæatæ and Carians. Plin. 31. tells us, the Romans celebrated the Neptunalia, on the tenth of the Calends of August, and in the Calendar is, D. Nept. Lud. The whole Month of February, also was facred to him, either to make him Propitious to the Sea-men in the Spring and Summer, or because Expiatory Purgations performed that Month, were not done without Water. The Sooth-Cayers dedicated Galls to Neptune, thinking, Bitter very agreeable to Bitter.

f

ft

h

di

le

in

ti

P

W

W

Neptune was the first that broke Horses, and taught Horsemanship; and at last, is reported to be chang'd into an Horse himself. He had a most wonderful prodigious Temple amongst the Atlantides, where he was Seated in a large Chariot, with a Bridle in his Hand, and his Head touching the very Roof of that wast Temple; tho Herodotus says, his Statue was of Brafs, and but feven Cubits. From hence it was that the Circenfian Games, which were performed with Horses, were sacred to Neptunus Hyppius; but according to Livy, instituted in commemoration of the Rape of the Sabine Virgins. These Games were called Confualia, by the Romans, and Hippocratia, by the Arcadians; (during which time, both Horses and Mules were exempt from Labour and and Crown'd with Flowers) from some Subterranean and secret Altar, either Erected, or found near the Circus Maximus. Whether Consilia from the God Consus, consult Dion. Hal. lib. & Plutarch. Some are of Opinion. that from hence was intimated, that great Counfels ought to be kept fecret, wherefore the Passage to his Altar, was never open but at these times; which feems to imply, that Neptune and Consus were the same. And because People, at those Games, were struck with Terror by the Horses; Pausanias says, he was called Neptunus Taraxippus, and Supplications were made to him, to avert it. This Matter is differently related, see Dion. Halicarn. lib. 2. at your leilure; concerning his Trident, and the vast Shell in which he Rode, like a Chariot; his Noble Retinue and Triumphs, you must have recourse to the Poets. Nereus alfo, is the Male Name of a Sea-God, who had Fifty beautiful Daughters by Dorida, who were called Nereids.

The Feminine Names belong to the Sea, are Thetys, the Daughter of Oceanus and Dorida, and the Nymph Tethys.

1

h

1-

4-

Tethys, one of the Nereids. To these we may add the Napæa, or Naiades, the Nymphs of Fountains, and the Hydriades, and Ephydriades; the word Nymph, belongs peculiarly to those that preside over the Fresh Waters, and not to the Nereids: One of whom, Theodorus Gaza affirms, he saw when he was in the Peloponnesus, she had a beautiful Face.

C

th

fo

W

di

111

0

Fo

N.

Roi

in

bu

fpe

In

but

ha

on t v

con

Par

ate

llo

Ori

for ain

1

he .

es,

mo

DLL

(

There were also the Sirens, Daughters of Achelous, and the Muse Calliope; one of whom Sang, the other Play'd on a Pipe, and the third on an Harp, making fuch melodious Harmony, that they Charm'd the poor admiring Sailors, till they fell upon the Sicilian Rocks, and there suffer'd Shipwrack. Ulysfer Sailing this way, ty'd himself fast to the Mast of the Ship, and his Ships-Crew filled their Ears with Wax; and so the Sirens being frustrated of their expectation, threw themselves Head long into the Sea, and their lower-part was changed to Fish. But Servius is of Opinion, that they were part Birds, and not Fish, which is favour'd, both by Ovid and Claudian. de Rapt. Proserp. Boccace fays, the Sirens were reported, to Inhabit pleasant Fields, with Dead Mens Bones scatter'd about them. Xenophon fays, the Sirens Sing the Praises of Persons of transcendent Merit, whose Virtues have gain'd them Universal applause. Aristotle in his Book, de Admirabilibus, fays, that there were fome Islands on the farthest Coasts of Italy, called the Islands of the Sirens, where the Inhabitants Worshipped them, and built Temples and Altars to them. Their Names were Parthenope, Leucosia and Ligia, but enough of them. Not only the Sea, Rivers and Fountains in general were Worshipped, but some also beyond others. The Messenians Ador'd the River Pamirus. The Phrygians, Meander and Marsyas. Clitumnus in Umbria, the Inhabitants calling it Jovis Clitumnus, and prefixed fixed that Title on the Porch of his Temple, perhaps, because the Cattel drinking out of it, bea came White, fee Claud. Paneg.

£

h

ľ

e

1.

s,

ns

th

on 11-

m ni-

he

75,

ilt

ere m.

ne-

ers. The

Jm-

xed

There were also Female Names, as the Nymphs; that presided over Fountains, and the Goddesses, or those that presided over Rivers and Lakes; of the first fort, was Hypocrene and Salmacis in Halicarnassus; whole Waters are reported to Effeminate those that drink of them. Arethula the Fugitive, the Fons Camanarum at Rome; whence the Vestals every Day fetch'd the Water they purifi'd themselves with, whose Office it was, to keep Water as well as Fire. The Fountain Blandusia, amongst the Sabins, whose Names are recited more at larg, by Vollius. Arifotle in his Book, de Admirab. speaks of a Fountain in Cappadocia, the Water whereof was extream Cold. but always feem'd to be Hot. If any Person fufeeded of Perjury, was brought thither; if he were Innocent, the Water could glide on very smoothly but if Guilty, it would rage, swell, and foam, at that Prodigious rate, that it would not only dash on his Feet and Hands, but in his very Face, as if were the Executioner of Justice on him, and fo continued till he had discover'd the Truth, and askt Pardon for his Offence; but if he persisted obduate in his Villainy, he either was presently taken of a Dropsie, or else Vomited a vast quantity of orrupt Blood; wherefore it was called the Fons fovis Perjuri, and we need not doubt, but this Founain had Divine Adoration paid it.

I shall leave you to consult others, concerning the River Nymphs, as the Ismenides, Ionides, Pactolias, Amigrides, and Tiberiades, and Anna Perenna, mongst the Romans, whose sacred Rites were Personned in March; Juturna and Nais, called the Glow of the Rivers. But I must not omit, that Styn,

L

Acheron

Acheron, Pyriphlegeton, and Cocytus, were excluded this Superiour Region by the Antients, as infamous, and thrust down into the Inferiour. Lycopbron in Cassan, Places the Rivers Acheron, Pyriphlegeton and Styx, in that part of Italy called Aufonia. Authors tells us, there is one Cocytus in Italy, and another in Epirus, Pausan. Attic. also another Styx in Arcadia, an exceffive Cold Spring, by the mixture of Quick-Silver and Nitre, of fuch a Corrofive Quality, that nothing could endure it but the Hoof of an Indian Horse. Mule, or As; it is commonly reported, that Alexander the Great was Poison'd with it. Styx is derived from Stygus, which signifies Sorrow; which is more probable than fome, who deriv'd it from Setika, Silence: It was a Fountain, Lake or River, in Arcadia and Italy, detestable for its Sulphureous Smell, or Poisonous Quality; so that it is very Incongruous, to derive its Name from the Oriental Languages. By this Infernal Lake, it is faid, the Gods always fwore, for they enjoying an Eternal affluence of all that was good in Heaven, it was imagin'd, that they fwore by what they did not know. This Lake encompass'd Hell, a Place of the most exquisite Horror and Woe.

t

n

a

wi

SW

the

to po

mo

Boli

the

he

ulin

of 7

ne h

vith

lilla

nd

ishe

T

OUS

R

ltl

E

oth

I know the Platonists expound it another way; for, say they, this World is the Infernum, or Hul, into which the Soul Descends, when it is joyn'd to this Mortal Body. The first thing it meets with is the River Letbe (a River in Africa, near Bernica, but said to be in Hell as the former) which Drinking of, it forgets all that was past; then other River, which bring Grief and Sorrow; so that they whave this Fable Mystically to represent the state of the Soul in this World.

But to pass by these delirious Dreams, and proceed to the Oaths of the Gods, and the Punishmen

X-

ri-

is

m

er,

ous

On-

an-

Gods

nce

that

Lake

Hor-

way;

Hell,

a'd to

with,

rnices, Drink

Rivers

ey wil

tate o

id pro

hmen

that attended their violation. They were to be without Life and Motion for a whole Year. Servins from Orpheus enlarges the time, and fays, that the Gods that Iwear by the Stygian Lake, and are Perjur'd, are punish'd in Hell for nine thousand Years. These Fables were invented by the Poets, that Oaths might be facred and inviolable, in regard the Gods themselves were not exempt from Punishments upon this account. Indeed, all parts of Religion amongst the Heathens, tended to confirm the Validity of an Oath; they therefore fwore in fuch a Temple, clad in fuch an Habit, before the Altars, with the Sacrifices Burning on them, holding a Sword or a Knife upright; and a multitude of other Religious Ceremonies, that might strike Terror to those that durst Perjure themselves. To this purpole, Jupiter Horcius, who presided over Oaths amongst the Greeks, was represented with a Thunder-Bolt in his Hand; and Deus Pidius, or Jupiter amongst the Romans, who call'd him Holy, whose Image in the Roman Antiquities, is represented with the Masuline Image of Honour on his Right, and the Female of Truth on his Left, according to Dion. Hal. lib. 9. he had a Temple dedicated to him, and that not vithout the greatest reason; nothing being more fillainous than Perjury, nothing more Treacherous, nd unless God Revenge, it always escapes unpuished, no Man being able to secure himself against

The Lake Avernus also, for its Fetid and Sulphusous Smell, was translated from hence to the low-Regions, and was of such a Quality, that it kill'd the Birds that attempted to slie over it; but by Edict made by Augustus Casar, the Woods being at down where they grew thickest, it was made oth Salubrious and Pleasant. Servius Aneid. 3.

T .

The aforemention'd Rivers, and the Lake Avernus, were not only thrust down into the Infernal Mansions by the Heathers, but Gebenna it felf, by the Hebrews; it was formerly a Valley near feru. salem, where the Fews offer'd up their Children to Moloch; King Josiah, that he might defile this Place to the greatest degree, order'd Dead Carcasses, and all fort of Filthiness to be brought and laid there; from whence its Name was made use of, and fignified a place of Torment for the Wicked. St. Ferom. in 10. Cap. Mat. The Greeks and Romans worshipped Water as well as the Eastern People, tho' under other Names, and not only the Scythians, Celta, and other People, but the Inhabitants of America to this Day. The Scythians, called Vesta, Tabiti; Jupiter, Papaus; the Earth, Apia; Apollo, Oetofyrus; Venus the Celestial, Artempasa; Neptune, Thamimasides. Willibald, the first Bishop of Eisteten, in Germany, says, that before his time, the People there facrificed to Water. Foseph Acosta, lib. 5. cap. 2, 4. affirms, that in America, the Sea (by the Name of Mammococha) and the Springs, and Fountains, are accounted Deities; and I do not in the least question, but that those Nations, according to the antient and vulgar Acceptation of God amongst them (under which Notion, they also Worshipped the Stars and other Elements) Deified Water in general, as the most useful Element, tho' in some places hurtful also. For all Religious Worship antiently proceeded either from Love or Fear. So much for Water.

E

ſ

al

n

no

ot

tin

mo

per

he

it

65

Of the EARTH.

There were many Reasons which perswaded the Heathens to Worship the Earth, which tho' it be the most gross, yet was a Deity always present present with them. The Antients Worshipped Universal Nature in it. For Heaven dispensing the Seminal Virtue of things thro' the Air to the infe-The Earth was esteem'd the Storeriour Elements. House that received them, and then distributed them as a Steward; upon which account, it appeared to them the most Conspicuous and Pleasant Theatre of Divinity. Without whose affistance, neither those secret Principles of things would be furnished with an external Drefs, nor become the Objects of our Sight. 'Tis true, that the Great God hath Created many things, but they would have been only subservient to himself, and useless, and unknown to us. Wherefore the Antients feign'd a fort of Marriage between Heaven and Earth, making Heaven the Husband, and Earth the Wife, from whence proceeded this vast Progeny on the Earth. But it was not only because things were thus produc'd by her, but that she poised and supported her felf in the Air, after a miraculous manner, they attributed Divinity to her. To this, add her Diurnal Motion, which was not the Opinion of some Modern Philosophers only.

Upon these, and many other Reasons, whether probable or superstitious, the Antients paid profound Veneration to the Earth; more especially, because no other Element besides it, received Man, and other Animals into its Bosom after their alotted time here: This Element being esteem'd the common Mother, would not suffer Mortals to be destitute after this Life: To testifie their grateful Dependance on her, as foon as a Child was Born, they laid it down on the Eatnh, commending it to her Care; but afterwards, lifting it up, they put it under the Tutelage of the Goddess Levana; then to the Goddess Cunina, who protected it in the Cradle,

lways resent

0 d

1-

0nd his

a-Ceild.

hat ter.

meand ies;

10le Ac-

No-Eleufe-

For ither

vaded which Cradle, and prevented Fascination; afterwards to the God Vagitanus, to still its crying; next to the Goddess Paventia, to expel all Childish Fears from it; lastly to Edusa and Potina, to take care of its Meat and Drink.

The Earth was not called the Mother of Men and Children only, but of Gods, and of those who by their transcendent Merit, had advanced themselves into that number; therefore she is called the Great Mother. But whether she was called Cybele from a Cube, which Figure Pythagoras, that was instructed by the Egyptians, attributed to the Earth, as I shall discourse of hereaster; and of her other Names, as Isis, Ops, Rhea, Vesta, Ceres, Proserpina, Bona Dea, Flora, and Pales, and many more Deities are reduced to the Earth, denoting some Power or Qualification belonging to it.

First Is, tho' (as I shewed before) she properly signifies the Moon, yet has some reference to the Earth. For, as Osiris being the active Principle of Good, was called, the Sun in Heaven, and the Nile on Earth; so Iss, as the passive Principle, by the Egyptians, was Luna in Heaven, and Terra here, as will be evident from what sollows. Servius in Eneid. 8. says, Isis in the Egyptian Language, is the Earth, and Macrob. 2. Saturn. C. 20. Isis was Worshipped in a double capacity, as the Earth or the Nature of all Sublunary things, it is by the continuance of the Breasts of this Goddess, that all things increase, all things being nourished by the Earth or Universal Nature. So says Jul. Firmicus de Err. Prof. Relig.

Ceres also may be included here. So Herod. Is in the Egyptian Tongue, is Ceres, and Apollod. in Biblioth. lib. 2. which is not only confirm'd by the Rites that are in common to them both, of which more hereafter; but because the very Rites of Ceres came

came from Egypt into Greece, as Clemens Alexandrin

The Syrian or Hierapolitan Goddess amongst the Phanicians and Syrians, signified Rhea, or the Earth, which Lucian says, he was informed of by a very judicious Person. There were the same Rites in the Worship of Rhea, and the Hierapolitan Goddess, and proceeded to a strange Severity, unheard of in our Times, that their Priests should be Castrated; which was done in imitation of Attys: And I really believe these sacrotum, rather than the Priests. A Tower Crown was set upon the Head of each of these Goddesses, their Chariots drawn by Lions, and Drums Beating before them, as we learn from Lucian.

Macrobius ingeniously proves the Atergatis of the Assyrians, signified the Earth also, tho' she does the Moon, and all Nature subject to the insluence of the Sun. From the Egyptians, Phanicians and Syrians; I proceed to the Phrygians, who Worshipped the Earth, by the Names of Rhea, Cybele and many others.

In all accounts of the Religion of the Heathers; fomethings Historically relate to the Actions of the Antients, and others must be Mystically applied to the Nature of things. According to the former, Vossim de Orig. and Prog. Idolo. Ch. 52. Rhea falls under a threefold consideration; First, as Rhea, who is called the common Mother of all things, or Evab, the Mother of all things living, and Wise of Adam, who was the most Antient Saturn, if we understand a Man by the Word, and not Nature. Secondly, that she was the Wise of Noah, who also is called Saturn. Thirdly, that she was a Queen of the Antient Phrygians, who was Enamoured with a Peasant, called Attys; who, after her Death, was called called the common Mother of all things, that she might have the same Adoration and Honours paid

b fe

0

I

n

p

A

T

al

po

all

for W

יעב

Ta

mo

01 fei

St

an

T

it,

M

her as were given to the Earth.

The Great Mother, or Rhea, had variety of Names according to the Diversity of Places. Romans, who received the Worship of her from the Phrygians, called her, Mater Phrygia Cybele, from the Mountain Cybelus, according to some, in Phrygia, others Bithynia. Dyndamena, from Mountains in Phrygia, of that Name. Idea, from Mount Idus in Phrygia, and Pessinuntia, from Pesinus in Galatia, where it Borders on Phrygia; and Mygdonia, from a part of Phrygia; Agdistis, from a Mountain in Phrygia, fo called; also Pylene. Even the Cimmerians Worshipped her, by the Name of the Great Mother. Hesschius says, the Mother of the Gods was called Cybebe, by the Cimmerians, inspiring Men with Madness, which the Greeks call Cybebein, and therefore they were called Cibici, who were inspir'd and polfessed by the Mother of the Gods, as the Priests of Cybele were.

St. Augustine out of Varro fays, Mother Earth had many Names and Appellations, by which Deities were generally understood. The Earth was called Ops, because it was meliorated by industry; Mother, because of its plentiful production, Great; producing all forts of Food; Proserpina, all Vegetables proceeding from her; Vesta, because clothed with Herbs and Flowers; and other Goddesses, without any absurdity, may be reduc'd hither. Tellumo, amongst the Heathens, was the Male Seminal Power; Tellus, the Female, tho' in the common acceptation of the Word, Tellus fignified both. Amongst other Romans, Tulles made Vows unto Ops, or the Earth; Dion. Halicar. Tullus lifting up bis Hands to Heaven, made a Vow to the Gods, that if they did overcome the Sabines,

Sabines that Day, be would institute solemn Festivals to Saturn and Ops, which the Romans afterwards publickly Celebrated every Year after Harvest, and doubled the Number of Salii; where I question not, but that by Saturn and Ops, the Heaven and Earth are underflood, to whom Tatius built a Temple, and Confecrated Altars, by the Names of Saturn and Rhea. Pliny lib. 24. speaks of a Temple built for the Earth, or Tellus, in Sp. Cassius's Court-Yard; and Varro fays, the had a small Chapel in the Palace, into which, none but the Vestals and the Publick Priests were permitted to enter.

0

)-

r.

d

91 (-

1-ad

ies

ed

er,

ng ed-

rbs

ny

flan lus,

the

ans,

ion.

ven, the

nes,

Let us now enquire by what Image the Great Mother was tepresented, and then what fort of Worship was paid to the Earth. As to the first, St. Aug. cites out of Varro, that The Great Mother has Drums, to signifie, that she is the Globe of the Earth. Towers on her Head, represent Towns; there were Seats about ber, because all things moved but ber self only, Capons were Sacred to her, to imitate, that such as had no Seminal faculty of their own, should attend on the Earth, all things being to be found in her. Those that Worshipped ber, were forbidden to sit; there being always something for them to do. The noise of Cymbais, and clashing of Weapons, represent what she is; the Weapons were made of Brass, because she was antiently Worshipped, before Iron was found out. The Lions about her, were Loofe and Tame, to imitate, that no part of the World was so Remote and Savage, but might be Civiliz'd and Cultivated. Ovid. de Fast. gives another Reason, to which I reler my Reader; also concerning a certain Sacred Stone, which the Phrygians called the Great Mother, and how it came to be conveyed to Rome, into the Temple of Victory, and Funeral Banquets appointed it, and Games instituted in Honour of it, called the Megalesia; consult Liv. Cic. and Quint. thus much for her Representations. Her

h

t

if

tl

de

T

W rot

Lu

Th

to 1

not der,

and

Wh

Arck

The

Bloo

that

of

Her Worship follows, which I am in suspense whether to call it Mystical or Lunatick. Here it were to be wish'd, that we had that Book of Proclus Licius, mentioned by Suidas. Proclus, fayshe, Wrote a Book concerning the Great Mother of the Gods, which if any Person peruse, be will find, that by inspiration, he discover'd all the Theology of that Goddes: But this Book is Perish'd in the Ruins of Times. Eminent amongst her Priests, were the Curetes, and those especially, Etolian, Creticks, and Phrygians. They were called Curetes from Cura, Shaving, and on the contrary, the Acarnanes from being unshaved; of which Vossius gives a reason, lib. 53. but such an one as I cannot acquiesce with, for I conceive the Customs of that Order of the Priests of the Great Mother, proceeded from certain Religious Rites, and not from any Military reason or accident; and the rather because of that agreement, that was between the Rites of Isis, and the Great Mother, mentioned before. For the Priests of Isis, amongst other Ceremonies in common, Shaved their Heads, made a doleful Noise, beating their Breasts, and tearing their Arms. I also am of Opinion, that there were other Orders of Priests belonging to this Goddess, mentioned by Strabo, lib. 10. called Corybantes, Cabiri, Idæi, Dactyli, Telchines. The Cory-Rites of the Great Mother. The Cabiri, from a Mountain in Berecynthia, of that Name, whose Foot they Inhabit; Dactyli, because they were only Five in Number, and had so many Sisters, Representing the Figures on the Hand. Telchines, being Nine; they accompany'd Rhea, from Rhodes to Crete, which, from them afterwards was called Telchinia. will furnish you with many more of the Opinions of the Antients on this subject. Her

Her Priests, who were all Castrated, were called Galli, not in reproach to the Gauls, who set Fire to Rome, as St. Jerome thought; but from Gallus, a River in Phrygia, according to Herodian. The Phrygians antiently celebrated the Orgyia, near the River Gallus, from which the Goddesses Eunuch Priests had their Names. It was credibly reported, that those that Drank of this Water, run Mad, which if true, it is no wonder, that those who assisted at the Celebration of her Rites, should run up and down like Lunaticks. To which relates that of Ovid.

Gallus, with his Distracting Waters Glides, On Green Cybele and Cylene's Sides.

n

e

at

en-

0.

ds,

nd nat

his ory-

ory-

red

n a oot

Five

ting

ne;

nich,

trabo

ions

Her

Those who imitated this Madness of the Galli, were said, Gallare. Thus Varro in Eumenid. What agreeableness can there be in them that Gallare thus. They tost their Heads, and turn'd their Arms round about, with their Weapons before them. So Lucretius.

With Arms before them, sign of dismal Rage.

They beat their Drums also, not in my Opinion, to render them more formidable, for their Gait (if not their whole Body) denoted them soft and tender, their Hair scented, with the richest Persumes and Ointments, their Face cover'd with a Veil of White Silk. The chief amongst them are called, Archigalli, of whom Tertullian. Apolog. Cap. 24. says, The most Holy Archigallus, offers up his most impure Blood. They made such howling and dismal Noise, that the sabulous Story which the Priests invented of their Great Mothers Darling, called Attys, cannot not be better represented. Then they beg Alms; for which they are called the Great Mothers Sharpers, which was done in many Places, particularly in Carthage, in St. Augustine's time. They were not permitted to gather it at Rome, but very seldom, and that on certain prefix'd Days; lest as Tully says, their Minds should be filled with Superstitions.

fe

d

75

tl

177

16

M

M

Gi

m lec

of

PO

M

TI

Sei

and

wh

Ex

in;

the

We

tut

Here give me leave to quote a most Excellent passage out of Dion. Hal. lib. 2. which will evidently shew the Sentiments of the Romans about Exotick Religions. Altho' People of all Nations Inhabit this City, and it be convenient, that every one should Wor-(hip after the manner of his own Country; yet no Religious Rites of Foreign Countries are publickly suffer'd, which is in many other Cities; but if any are introduced from other Places, at the command of the Oracle, yet the Citizens still perform the sacred Rites after their own manner, rejecting all their ridiculous and monstrous Fables, as is done in the Worship of the Idwan Mother, to whom the Emperours sacrifice and appoint Games every Year after the Roman manner; but the Phrygians perform the Priestly Office, carrying her thro the City, gathering Money for the Mother, beating their Breasts, and others following with an Hymn in Praise of her, Playing on Pipes, and Beating of Drums; but no Native Roman ever gather'd Money with them in the Streets; and by a Decree of the Senate, are forbidden to celebrate the Phrygian Orgyia to the Mother; they have such an aversion to all Foreign Ceremonies, and such kind of indecorous Madness. Tho' none I suppose, will imagine that I am ignorant, bow beneficial some fabulous Grecian Stories are to Mankind; which, either instruct them in the Works of Nature Allegorically, or were Invented to comfort and support them, under Casualties that attend Humane Life, and free the Soul of Terrors and Perturbations, and extravagant Opinions, or were contrived to conduce to some other such profitable end; all this I know as well as any other, but I pass them by with a Religious Caution, and only approve the Roman Theology, knowing very little good can accrue from these Grecian Fables, nor are they advantagious but to sew, and to those only, who shall accurately examine and dive into their Scope and Design, which fudgment and Wisdom sew are Masters of; but the Vulgar, and those ignorant of Philosophy, make ill use of these Discourses; for, they either raise in them a Contempt of God, as subject to many Misfortunes, or else they give themselves up to all Licentiousness, seeing the Deity himself is obnoxious to the same. But I shall leave these things to their consideration, who Study Speculative Philosophy only. Thus far Dion.

These sacred Rites were called Megalensia, and asterwards the letter N was lest out, and called Megalesia; the Megalensian Games, were instituted by M. Jun. Brutus; who Dedicated a Temple to the Great Mother in the Palace, as Livy tells us; but I much question, whether her sacred Rites were called Materoa; I know Dion. Halicarn. makes mention of Matroamela, which I conceive to be a Poem compos'd in Honour of the Goddess; but I see no Authority sufficient to convince me, that her sacred Mysteries were called Materoa, as Vossius doess. These Games were celebrated in April, to which Servants were forbid to come, says Alex. ab Alexandro.

θ,

0-

199

ng

Ry

e,

be

re-

one

efi-

d;

Al-

em,

the

int

ons,

There were Feasts afterwards in Honour of her, where they were very exact and cautious about the Expences, and that no Foreign Wine was brought in; at last, these Feasts were kept in the Presence of the Great Goddess, where the Nobles of the City only were present. These sacrifices were first instituted by Dardanus. The Sacrifices were a Ram and a

Bull,

Bull, a Pine also was cut down then, in a Pine Grove, facred to Cybele; for they report, that Attys was changed into a Pine; to which alludes that of Virgil,

A Wood of Pines bas been my long delight, fays the Mother of the Gods; and Ovid. lib. 10. Metam, ----- Cyberian Attys did resign His Human Form, and chang'd it for a Pine.

And Martial on the Pine Nut.

- We are Cybele's Fruit.

The Oak was also Dedicated to Idea the Mother, fays Apollod. lib. 3. de Diis, being the first that afforder ed Animals Food as I Shelter. The Musical Instruments used in the Rites of the Great Goddeß, were Brass Cymbals, Box Pipes, Drums, little Bells, and the Horn. Dempster, from Hadrianus Junius makes mention of Bells, and Nolæ or little Bells, used at the facred Rites of Cybele; but my Opinion is, that they were rather Brass Cymbals and Crotala, for Bells and the Nolæ were invented long after, as the At the Feast, after the Rites Learned well know. were performed, the Guest pour'd the Wine out of a Drum, and Drunk out of a Cymbal, and by that means were inspir'd with the Mysteries of their Religion. Says Jul. Firmicus, In those Rites were represented Spears, Torches, Platters, Sheep-Hooks, which Iknow not what they fignified.

I shall now conclude this Discourse; Fables being all along interwoven with those Mysteries; and some things being to be understood Morally, and some Mystically; I cannot see that much can be gathered

from

fr

m

E

Pa Pa

ol

M

D

me Bo

the

of

be

Cb

the

wl

Gr

Di

fev

to

ing

Wor

tak

cle

the

the

to

neg

the

lee

other

from them; tho' many very specious Arguments might then be brought for the Adoration of the Earth; yet I cannot conceive how Proclus could palliate those ridiculous Rites invented by the Priests, tho' I could wish his Book had come to our Hands.

Thus it is evident, that not only the Sun and Moon, with the other Planets, and fixed Stars, the Heaven, and Superior Elements were Ador'd with Divine Honour; but the Earth also, which, tho it feems the most abject and fordid part of the World, yet fustains it self as well as the other Elements, or Heaven it felf; and the Stars, the Superiour Bodies also, in a more especial manner, do perfect their Operations on it, their Powers and Efficacy terminate here. Of what great value this Globe of Earth is, will appear from this, that if it could be Pav'd all over with the most valuable Jewels in Checquer-Work, we should rather throw them all into the bottom of the Sea, than be without Land, whereon to Plant a Garden; for three Acres of Ground is more useful to Mankind, than thirty of Diamonds. To conclude, I will only add fome few things to what has been already faid, defigning to treat more largely of them in my Book, Concerning the Causes of Error in Matter in Religion.

The Heathens antiently did not only Worship the World in its Universal Extension and Magnitude taken entirely together, but in its Parts and Particles, esteeming it very Indecorous, to Worship only the most Eximious Parts of their Deity, and pass by the others with neglect; for if we should pretend to Reverence the Breast of a great Monarch, and neglect his more worthy Members; or any parts of the Body; without any regard to the whole; or seem to admire his Eyes and Nose, and slight the

5

s,

g

d

m

other Members, or commend his whole Body, and except his Nose and Eyes, would not he think himself egregiously affronted? Thus the Heathers esteemed it base and impious to vouchsafe Divine H nour to this or that Star, or Element, and to despise and reject the other Parts of the World, as vile and abject. Wherefore, as they believed, that they Woshipped the whole World, in the Stars, Heaven, and sour Elements, which are its integral Parts; so the World being composed of these Parts, and being the best Representation of the Deity, they were of Opinion, that they Worshipped the Supream God, paying External Adoration to an External, and Internal to an Internal Deity.

vide out any retend on the woodle; or

But I shall handle this Subject with more freedom (God willing); and others, whose pleasure it is, may do the like. I have not quite lost time, in shewing, that those Names which the ignorant Vulgar thought belonged only to Men, by the Writings and Actions of the more cultivated Heas thens, feem Mystically to appertain to the Stars, Heaven and the Elements; for if there were nothing more to be understood by Jupiter, Juno, Mars, Apollo, Diana, Venus, Saturn, Rhea, and the rest of their Gods, but what is fabulously reported of them by the Poets; we must conclude the Heathers to be the most ridiculous and absurd of Mortals. But whether it were from the Inventions of the Priests; or from the Tyranny of Princes, who boafted their Progenitors, were equal to Gods, or the fervile and bale Flattery of the Populace, that the Adoration of Men obtain'd and crept into the World, I intend now to shew.

ha

tio

oui

fee

Car

mit

or

DOW

ion

B

at t elf,

Men

Heat

ven,

er'd

art

tars,

hat

ther

hose

The o rmi

uesti

CHAP. XI.

Concerning the Worship of Heroes, either Proper or Symbolical; what Gods were called Indigetes, and who Dii Minorum Gentium.

A Fter the Worship of the Supream Deity, the World and its most excellent Parts which I have treated of before; that more inseriour Adoration of Heroes amongst the Heathens, offers it self to our enquiry. This would not in the least have seem'd so strange and absurd, if those to whom the Care of Religious and Sacred Rites were committed had kept themselves within their due Limits; or Humane Authority had not sormerly been so powerful and prevalent, that it could make Innova-ions in the most pure Religion.

1

.

it

in

nt

ne

a.

llo,

ds,

0-oft

it

om

ge-

pale

ot

end

But what turned to the Profanation of Religion at that time, was, that even Divine Worship it less, was either Decreed or Performed to some Men who had deserved well in this Life; for the Heathens did not only Mount their Heroes to Heaten, and bestow Immortality upon them, but ener'd their Names amongst their Gods; for the most part Worshipping their Heroes under the Names of tars, and the Stars by the Names of Heroes, so hat their Names served interchangeably for each ther; nor will it be easie to determine, whether nose old sabulous Stories are to be applied Mystically to the Stars, or Morally to Men.

The Muses Favourites have here made so great e of their Licentia Poetica, that it is difficult to dermine, to which they refer; so that I make no lestion but their scurrilous Ribbaldry may be the effect of Ignorance and Petulancy. There was nothing to obscene and base, or even impious, that first the Greek Poets, and after them the Roman, would not invent and relate, concerning those Men, that not only deferv'd well of their own Country, but of Mankind in general. I can call these nothing but meer Fictions, which the Poets have first handed to us, for there is not one Writer in Profe as I know of, that ever acknowledg'd any of them for truth. In the Study of the Ethnick Theology, we must therefore discard the Poets, not only because by intermixing their fabulous Fictions with the true History of the Antient Heroes, they have render'd the whole Suspicious, if not altogether Improbable, to the most credulous part of Mankind, but also intermixing their Romantick Stories with the Mystical Doctrines of the Heaven, Stars and Elements (which way of Writing the Heathens antiently used, either to explain or conceal their Opinion) they have left nothing entire or perfect, either in History or Religion it felf.

M effect

ti

ti

G

th

th

C

0

Ti

015

an

VA

Go

Pe

Ba

Wi

the

na

Su

mo

did

and bai

1

to !

Wit

abo

the

and

The Original of these Fables, was thus; There being many Jupiters, Mars's, Venus's, and Bacchus's, in several Ages, and different Parts of the World; and at that time, some Men advanc'd amongst the Number of the Gods: Some in savour of their own Country Deities Ridicule those of other, and they in requital were as free with theirs. Upon this they sell together by the Ears, the secret Memorials of their Gods were composed of nothing but Adulteries, and such abominable Crimes; upon which Building several sabulous Relations, the more Modern Greek and Roman Poets have managed it so, that it is impossible to discover true History from salse. To rectifie this, and that Men might have a more just Notion of the Gods. Romulus of 7

y

k

ot

ns

ey

0.

of

ick

en,

the

on-tire

nere

us's,

rld;

the

own

and

Jpon

Meg but upon

, the

nagd

iltory lus or do

Hymns,

der'd a most Glorious Reformation of Religion to be made in his time; according to Dion. Halicarn. lib. 2. He was of Opinion, that the Fables delivered down to us from our Ancestors, which contained things Scandalous and Criminal, were useless and indecent, and so far from being fit to be supposed of the Superiour Deities, that they were unworthy good Men. He commanded thefe things to be laid aside, and engaged his Citizens both to think and speak with an awful Reverence concerning the Gods, suffering nothing to be Attributed to them unworthy of their Bleffed Natures. There are no Romans that relate the Story of Coelus's being deposed by his Children; nor Saturn Fearing and Destroying his own Off-spring, lest they should draw him into an Ambuscade. There is nothing of Jupiter's turning his Father Saturn out of his Kingdom, and shutting him up in Hell, nor any thing of the of Wars the Gods, their Wounds, being Captives and Serving-Men. No Cruel or Doleful Festivals, where the Women are put to Death, to render the Gods Propitions by their Cries, and Groans, as the Greeks Perform in the Rape of Proferpine, and downfal of Bacchus, and many more of the like nature. Notwithstanding, the Grecian Fables did obtain amongst the Romans; some of which came from the East, nay, even Superstition it self, which had been Supportable, had fabulous Greece Attributed no more to their Heroes that were Deified, than it did to its Amadisius; whose Actions were Virtuous and Modest, savouring nothing of the fordid Debaucheries of the Heathen Heroes.

The manner of this Adoration of Heroes, was to set up their Statues, Adorn'd for the most part with Military Ornaments, Wax Candles Lighted about them, burning Frankincense and Cinamon; then those Statues were carried in great State, and their Noble Achievements Sung in Saliarian

M 2

Hymns; Mamurius, Verrarius and Lucia Volumnia, amongst others, were advanced to this Honour, according to Varro, lib. 5: and 8. de L. L. and I do not find that Worship paid to Heroes extended any faither. Plato, 4. de Leg. says, that Heroes ought not to be worshipped after their Death; but only to have their Statues Adorn'd and Honour'd. For Temples, Altars, and Sacrifices, properly belonged to Divine Worship. Plutarch tells us, the difference of these ways of Worship; The Inhabitants of Lampsacus first paid only Honours unto Heroes; but afterwards Sacrificed to them as Gods. Upon which it was Decreed, that Bloody Sacrifices should be of fer'd to the Gods only.

But if Heroes had not Temples and Altars dedicated to them, yet at least they had Chapels; according to . Dion. Halicarn. who with Plato deduces them from a middle Nature, betwixt the Gods and Men, who tometimes Affociated with the Gods, and fometimes with Men, from whom fprung a mixt Race of Heroes. Amongst the Romans, Fabricius, Corunganus, Duillius, Metellus, Luctatius, Maximus, Marcellus, Africanus, Paulus, Gracchus, Cato, Scipio, Lælius, and many others, were fuch Herous as these; tho' without Divine Assistance, there had never been any fuch Persons as they were, as Cicero says, lib. 2. de Nat. Deorum. Amongst the Grecians were Ulysses, Diomedes, Agamemnon, Achilles, whom, according to Homer, the Gods accompanied in their greatest danger, which implies their Notion of Divine Grace, accompanying and affifting their Heroes. Cicero in his 2. lib. de Leg. mentions three Classes of Gods, to whom Divine Honour and Adoration was paid. First, those that always Inhabit the Heavens. Secondly, those whose Merit hath advanc'd them to Heaven. And Thirdly, fuch Divinities

a

at

th

th

th

fr

Py

vinities by the affiftance of whom Heaven is ac quired; which he calls, the Mind, Virtue, Piety and Faith. But I referve this for another place, in regard it will very much Illustrate the Religion of the Antients.

Having already treated of those who always Inhabit the Heavens, I proceed to the fecond Class, and of these also, after Death. They were called, Dii Indigetes, as if they prevail'd upon the Gods, fays Servius, they were called, Dii Minorum Gentium, by others; and Scaligar tells us, that in an old Gloffary, they were called, Hemitheoi Curetes; fuch as Hercules, Faunus, Carmento, Evander, Castor, Pollux, Asculapius, Acca Laurentia, Quirinus, and others. Festus fays, it was impious to invoke, or call upon thefe, lest their certain Number should not be fixed; or fome, out of temerity, should be Worshipped before others. These and the Lares, and also the Deities called Novensiles, had the Power of us, and our Enemies committed to them.

The Indigetes were Regiltred in a Book, which Vossius calls, Hieratica Biblia, and the Romans, Indigitamenta; it contain'd the Names of these Deities, and the reason of those Names. These Indigitamenta, were in the nature of our Calendar or Rubrick; and it is very probable, that from these Indigitamenta, the Heroes we formerly mentioned, when they were Deified, were called Indigetes, rather than because, being nearer related to Mortal Men, they had a more especial and tender care for

t

1-

5;

uods

ds,

a

11:-

1X1-ato,

roes

iere

ere,

the

illes,

d in

tion their

hree

d A-

Inha-

hath

Di-

nities

The Antient Heathens exempted the Supream God from all Care, being infinitely and perfectly happy. Cicero de Divin. Quotes a Passage out of Sophocles to this purpose; When a very Noble Gold Cup was stole out of Hercules's Temple, he appear'd to him in his Sleep,

M 2

Sleep, and describ'd the Person that committed the Fact, which he did several times; yet Sophocles neglected it, but being often admonished, he goes up into the Areopagus, and relates the Matter; and the Question being put, the Person nominated by Sophocles, confess'd the Fact, and restor'd the Cup; from which time it was called the Temple of Hercules Indicis. There are more such Examples as these related there by Cicero. Lucretius and others, give the Etymologies of the Indigetes, concerning which, every one is free to use his own Judgment.

I come now to Discourse of Hercules, and others, where it will appear, that the Heathens did not only attribute Immortality to their Herces, (for then they did not in the least question the Immortality of the Soul) but Happiness also; conferring Divinity it felf on their Famous Men.

HERCULES.

Here were many Hercules's amongst the Antients : Varro enumerates Forty four. The most famous were, Hercules Margulanus, Hercules Ogmins, who was the Symbol of Eloquence amongst the Gauls ; Hercules Pollens, Hercules Thebanus, first called Alcides, Hercules Tyrius, or Egyptian; and there were two of them; the Elder called Melicarthus, or Esau, the Founder of the City of Tyre; and the Younger, who Subdu'd Geryon, and was Worshipped in Sidon in Spain. The Phanicians relate the same things of their Hercules, as Foshua did in the Land of Canaan. And I strongly suspect from the killing of the Lion, and other circumstances, that Sampson and Hercules were the same; but for this, consult Vossius de Idololatria, lib. 1. who hath Collected very much upon this Subject. In

In short all Valiant Men went by the Name of Hercules; the most celebrated was he, that Conquer'd fo many Tyrants; but the Hercules mention'd by Dion. Hal. lib. 1. was no less Remarkable for his Piety. For whereas the Heathens used to offer up Humane Sacrifices to Saturn, to abolish this Savage Cuftom, Hercules Founded an Altar on the Hill of Saturn at Rome, and order'd the Sacrifices to be burnt with pure Fire; and whereas they used to tye Men Hand and Foot, and throw them into the Tiber, to appeale the Anger of that Deity; he made it suffice, that a Pupper made like them, and dress'd in their Cloths, should be thrown into that River; which Cuftom, Dion. fays, continued to his time. Diod Siculus fays, the Tenths were dedicated to Hercules, and those that did so, were the most Fortunate; Hercules Promising so before he was made a God, See Plutarch, Q. Ro. Aurel. Victor. Macrobius, Servius, and others. His Sir-names were Cubam, Defensor, Magnus, Triumphalis, Silvanus, Vector Musarum or Musagetes. The Titles of Pacificus, Invictus, Olivarius, are to be feen on his Medals: and under these Denominations, many Temples and Images were Erected to him at Rome, and elfewhere; for none amongst the Heroes was so Univerfally Honoured as some Hercules or other.

FAUNUS.

e

10 18

p-ne he

he

at 15, ol-

In

Here were two Kings of the Aborigines, whose Names were Faunus; the first by some Chronologers, is faid to live A. M. 1520. The other, the Son of Picus, who first dedicated Buildings and Groves to certain Deities; from whence, according to Probus, they are called Fana; and from him some deduce the Original of the Fauns and Satyres: He Was

M 4

CT

E

D

h

P

V

th

C

n S

L

tı

t

f

was contemporary with Hercules, who gave him his Wife; and after his Death, he used to scare Men with a terrible Voice, and excite Panick Fears in them, and Fright them with Apparitions, Dion, Hal. lib. 7. So he was translated into the Number of the Indigetes, and facred Honours paid to him, and his Praise celebrated in Verse. Here I must beg leave to diffent from Vossius; who fays, that Faunus was not a King of the Aborigines, for Dion. Hal. lib. 1. is positive, that Faunus held the Kingdom of the Aborigines, which he received from the Ancestors; I shall not insist on the other Faunus, who, some Writers tell us, was King of the Aborigines, A. M. 2724. in regard the Authority is very much to be suspected. Faunus and Picus, Deities of Mount Aventine, are reported to have brought 711piter down from Heaven by their Charms, to Anfwer what Questions they askt him. Ovid. lib. 3. Fastorum.

Great Jove, their Charms make thee descend from Heaven, Hence is the Name Elicius thee given.

Apuleius being Guilty of this Detestable Art, had like to have suffer'd the most Condign Punishment.

CARMENTA.

Armenta was the Daughter of Mercury, and the Mother of Evander; her Name was Nicostrata, but she was called Carmenta from Carmen, in which she Predicted things to come; others rather derive Carmen from Carmenta; she was esteemed a Prophetess, and Plutarch calls her Carmenta, carens mens, not appearing like one in her right Mind, but in a Rage, when when she deliver'd her Predictions. She was Religiously Worshipped by the Romans, especially the Matrons, and had Altars dedicated to her at the Carmental-Gate, under the Capitol, where they Sacrificed to her. She had also a Temple in the Eighth Quarter of the City, and Heroick Honours Decreed her.

EVANDER.

Evander was the Son of Carmenta and Mercury, about the time when Hercules came into Italy; he exceeded Arcas the King of the Aborigines, for Power and Authority; besides many ingenious Inventions sound out by him, as Musical Instruments, the Harp, the Triangle, Sports, he also Invented the Greek Letters, and established Laws; and for his incomparable Learning, and excellent Wisdom; had not only the Honour due to Heroes paid him, but Sacrifices were offered to him every Year, Dion, Hal. lib. 11.

CASTOR and POLLUX.

Castor and Pollux, were called Dioscuri, or the Sons or Children of Jupiter, and Brothers of Helen; it is reported, that they were often seen Assisting the Romans in their Battels, Fighting on Horse-back; being of the Number of the Semi-Deities (as Dion. Hal. lib. 7. says) and descended from a Parent God, they were supposed to be translated into Gods, Temples built, and sacred Rites performed to them, a Fountain dedicated, and Annual Sports decreed to their Honour, and a most Noble and Pompous Horse-Parade on the Ides of July, being the Day whereon the Romans are said to have have obtain'd a Victory by their affiftance, Dion. Hal. lib. 6.

ESCULAPIUS.

Icero, de Natu. Deor. mentions three Asculapius's, the first Son of Apollo, the second the Father of Mercury; the third Son of Archippus and Arfinoe. The were all Eminent Physitians, but especially the Son of Apollo. The Romans brought him, or rather a Serpent that the Greeks worshipped for him, from his Temple in Epidaurus, and put him into a Temple Built for him in the Island of Tyber; where the Diseased used to lie all Night, expeding to recover their Health by it. He being first received at Epidaurus amongst the Gods, called Indigetes, was afterwards Wosshipped in Greece, Carthage and Rome, and had all the Honours due to Heroes paid him.

ACCA LAURENTIA.

Cca Laurentia, or Larentia, the Wife of Fau-I stulus, who being very Beautiful, grew vaftly Rich, by Proffituting her Body; she was Nurse to Romulus and Remus, who were said to have fuck'd a Wolf, because they suck'd Lupa, or a Whore; from whence their places of Refort are called, Lupanaria. Leaving the People of Rome all her Wealth, they thought she deserv'd Publick Sacrifices should be offer'd unto her, and a Day kept in Honour of her; her Festivals called Laurentalia, were established by Romulus himself, not only because the was his Nurse, but after he had Kill'd his Brother Remus, and was going to lay violent Hands upon himself, by her Prudent Advice, she preven-te H ab

Cu

of

Ab

 $T\epsilon$

tur

en

the

to

Qu

all Na

Me cal

fay

nus

Tat

mus,

cero

der

the

kno

the

the

Her

the

d

d

W

125

ve

e;

04-

th,

uld

ot

sta-

the

her

up-

rented

ted it, and raised up his drooping Spirits, Dion.

QUIRINUS.

I Shall conclude with Quirinus (tho according to Dion. Halicarn. the Heroes were almost innumerable) some derive Quirinus from the Sabine word Cuis, which signifies a Spear; or from the Genius of the Place, so called, who, in the time of the Aborigines, when a young Girl Dancing in the Temple of Engolus, seeming to be in a sacred Rapture, threw himself into the Chancel of the God, he enjoyed her, and had a Heroe by her, Dion. Halicarn. lib. 1.

When Romulus by his Genius was introduc'd into the Society of the Gods, he commanded the Romans to call him Quirinus, uttering those words, I am Quirinus; consult Plutarch. But Quirinus without all doubt, was Romulus, tho' it is sometimes the Name of Mars also, and signifies Brave and Valiant Men, in general; yet the Romans were from thence called Quirites, more especially the Soldiers. Varro says, a Shrine was appointed for Romulus, or Quirinus, in the Quirinal Tomb. Dion. Hal. writes, that Tatius Consecrated a Temple and Altar to Quirinus. So much concerning the Indigetes, whom Cicero hath particularly named, according to the order of Time.

Now the forme few of them had Adoration paid them beyond the Honours that were generally acknowledged to be due to Heroes, yet, that was either the effect of Flattery, or the Superstition of the Times; for the Worship properly belonging to Heroes, was not of so large an extent; for both of these consult Justin. lib. 12. and Plutarch in Alexand.

For

For when Alexander for a long time had Lamented the Death of his Dear Ephestion, and erected a Tomb for him that cost 12000 Talents, and commanded him to be Worshipped as a God, infomuch, that it was held most facred to swear by his Name at that time; but because he would not depend upon his own Authority, he fent to the Oracle of Ammon to know whether it were lawful to place him amongst the Number of the Gods, The Oracle commanded that Ephestion should be Honoured, and Reverenced, and Sacrificed to, as an Heroe; where it is evident, that the Oracle did clearly diffinguish, tho' in Process of time, as Superstition made Encroachments, the Heathens increafed the Adorations they paid to their Heroes. The Solemnity of the ceremonial Rites, the Antiquity of the Story, and the Craftiness of the Priests, whose whole defign it was to bring the People to be entirely at their Devoir; in all Religions hath a mighty influence on Men prone to Crudelity. Thus as their Authority increased; the Honours that were paid to Heroes at first, sprung up into a Religious Worship, as I hinted concerning Lampsacus before, out of Plutarch.

Another occasion of this Error may be, that the Heathens believing the Supream God, committed the Care of particulars to these Heroes, and being always inclin'd to Superstition, paid them Honours, to render them propitious the sooner. There were many more Indigetes in the time of the Commonwealth of Rome; but I proceed to their

Cæsars.

h

in je.

bi

h

B

F

W

fo

b

tl

0

77

The C Æ S A R S.

Julius Cæsar, after his Death, was Consecrated by Augustus, of whom Manilius.

He's now a God, and does Adorn the Skie; With Radiant Beams, of Princely Majesty.

He had the Title of Divus given him, Strabo lib. 4. Diod. Siculus. lib. 1. Tzetz. lib. 1. Hift. 68. Pliny in his Panegyricks, says of Augustus, Tiberius Plac'd him in Heaven, but it was to introduce the Deity of Majesty; and Tacitus Annal. 1. The ceremonies of the Funeral being over, Temples and Honours were Decreed him. Numerius Atticus affirm'd, that he saw Augustus entering into Heaven; for which Livia gave him ten Sestertii, as Dio has it.

1

S

.

it

-

d

n

r.

e

ge

Pliny lay, Claudius was Deified by Nero, but that was in Derision; Vespasian by Titus, and Titus by Domitian; and this was done, that the one might have a God for his Father, and the other for his Brother; and afterwards fays, Thou hast exalted thy Father Nerva amongst the Stars. These Honours were not only paid to Emperours, by their Succesfors, but fometimes by the suffrage of the Senate. Jul. Capitolinus says of Antoninus Pius, He was Voted Divus with Universal approbation, every one being for bus admission of M. Antoninus Philosophus. the Senate thank'd him for Consecrating his Brother. of Elius Helvius Pertinax. Pertinax was placed amongst the Gods, by the Senate and People. gives an account of the Apotheosis of the Roman Emperours, and how the Romans Deified them. Where, alter the Celebration of the facred ceremonies, according to Cuftom, an Image of Wax, representing

th

fo

A

ha

th

Iu

fh

ca

in qu

as

hi ke

A

fre

tic

gr be fe

E

be

to

bu

th

th

th

la

th

the Emperour, made in a posture of Repose, is put on an Ivory Bed, fet in the Porch of the Royal Palace, Cover'd and Adorn'd with Furniture of Cloth of Gold. The Senate also Clothed in Black, and the Matrons in White, visit it for feven Days fuccesively; the Physitian standing by the Bed-side, and looking on it, as it were a Sick Person, saying every now and then, he grows worfe and worfe. Then upon the Day on which he is supposed to Die, the Young Men of the Senatorian and Equestrian Order, take the Bed upon their Shoulders, and carry it thro' the Via Sacra to the Old Market, where the Roman Magistrates used to lay down their Government. Hymns and Peans are Sung in Praise of the Deceased, by a Chorus of the Patrician Boys, and Women of the best Quality; then he is carried into the Field of Mars, where a Quadrangular Stage was Built of Wood, being erected, and filled with Combustible Matter, rising very High to a Point; he is Difrob'd of all those Rich Vestments: Ivory Images and Pictures; and whilft a great quantity of Perfumes and Odours are putting together, the Men of the Equestrian Order, Dance round in Armour; Chariots being driven round the Pile. After this, the next Successor to the Empire takes a Lighted Torch in his Hand, and fets Fire to the Palace in which the Bed was put; the Spectators at the fame time cast Fire on it, till the whole Machine is in a Flame, and confumed with a most fragrant Odour. After that the Eagle is let loofe, which as it is believed, carries the Emperour's Soul to Heaven; and then he is Worshipped with the other Deities, for the Heathens thought they had a right to Vote in Heaven it self (being Fellow-Citizens of the same World) and that the Gods would not deny those Admission amongst them, whom they

Chap. XI.

d

n

1-ıt

i-

d

m

y

they had unanimously judged worthy of that Honour.

Nor will this in the least feem strange, when we confider, that those Gods whom they generally esteem'd most Benign, and ready to answer their Prayers, were Men that they themselves had formerly Deified; yet still they paid the utmost Adoration to the Supream God, as the Author of all happiness; whom they esteem'd happy, because tho' all things were Govern'd by him, with fo much Juffice and Prudence, before there was any establithed Order, now he had exempted himself from the care of particulars, unless as far as they are contain'd in the general System of the World, and the Eternal

Laws. But more of this afterwards.

This Custom of Confecrating Emperours, was not quite abolished in the time of Constantine the Great; as may be feen by an Antient Medal; on which, his Soul Cover'd with Linen, and all the rest Naked, is carried to Heaven in a Chariot, and his Arm being stretch'd out, is receiv'd by another from Heaven, and under it CONS, that is Confecration: Perhaps his Successors thought it very incongruous, that those Honours or Rewards should not be paid to a Christian Emperour; which were conferr'd on the Heathens, and some of the worst of Emperours. The difference only was, that it was believ'd, that the Eagle carried the Heathen Emperours to Heaven; and Constantine was carried in a Chariot, but could not have admittance into Heaven, but by the affiftance of an extended Arm, which fignifies the Grace of God.

Famous Women also, had Divine Honours paid Livia, the Wife of Augustus Cafar was at last Consecrated, by her Grand Son Claudius, tho' not by her Son Tiberius; with an additional Honour, Honour, that the Women should swear by her. She was Consecrated in the Habit of Juno; that Juno might be Worshipped in her, and whatsoever was mystically understood by Juno amongst them. Thus Prudentius,

New Rites come in, and Livia Juno made.

This Inscription is in the Capitol, concerning Faustina, the Wife of Antoninus the Philosopher, Congratulate Faustina Deified by the Senate. Cajus Caligula commanded, that his Sifter Drufilla should have Divine Honours paid her in all the Cities; and there was one Livius Geminius of the Senatorian Order, who fwore that he faw her Ascending into Heaven, and Conversing with the Gods, and imprecated Destruction on him and his Family, if what he faid was falfe, calling the Gods to witness, and amongst the rest, Drusilla her self. So, that besides Numerius Atticus, whom I mention'd before; and Julius Proculus, who affim'd he faw Romulus mounting up to Heaven: Here was a third, who durft aver things very improbable, with most direful Imprecations; but for this, he deserv'd or receiv'd ten Sestertii. Dion. says, that Drusilla, in the Habit of Venus, was Confecrated by the Name of Panthea; for this Just. Lipsius brings an Antient Inscription. Veneri Celesta Augusta Sac. Mummia C. P. Dorcas, S. P. F. C. Masa the Wife of Severus Casar, and Grandmother of two Emperours was also Deified.

Some Men likewise were Ranked amongst the Gods, that were of an August Family, tho' they never possessed the Title. Thus Geta, Severus's Son, of whom his Brother Bossianus said, Divus sit dummodo not sit Vivus. Antinous, the Darling of the Emperour, Adrian, had Divine Honours paid him after

Sp

ar

mo

is

to tho

the

int

He

try

WO

cur

the

der

gen ven thir

the

bot

Fat

Hea

they

the mea

on,

the

after his Death, and an Oracle set up, of which Spartianus relates wonderful things. Let this suffice for the Worship paid to the several Roman Heroes and Emperours.

Of the Worship paid by the Greeks to their Herocs.

Tho' the Greeks advanced their Heroes into the number of the Gods, yet they acknowledged a most Good and Great God, far Superiour to them, who is unanimously Worshipped by all Nations; and to whom they were only subservient. They called those Dii, or Numina (Gods or Deities) whom they thought the Supream God had plac'd to preside over the World; or that after this Life, were admitted into the Celestial Society. Of this last fort were the Heroes, who had deserved well of their own Country, or Mankind in general, whom they esteemed worthy of Immortality, and a more Blessed Life.

0

t

d

25

d

1-ft

1-

n

of

;

n.

S. d.

he

le-

n,

m-

he

im

ter

Whenever therefore, such Troops of Deities occur in Greek Authors, it is to be understood, that the Stars, Heaven, and Elements are Mystically understood by them; or that they were Men, that the general Suffrage of Mankind had advanced to Heaven. Tho' it were a very presumptious and daring thing to pretend to dive into the Occult Secrets of the Supream God, yet it contributed very much both to excite and establish Virtue. I know the Fathers of the Church bitterly inveigh against the Heathens, for Worshipping Deified Men; but here they impose upon their Readers, because they took the Word God in another sense than the Heathens meant it, as I shewed before; and I am of Opinion, that a Deified Man, signified no more amongst the Heathers, than Macarites, or a Saint doth with the

bu

Wi

ON

the

Fi

Co

by

ha

ex

on

bu

ed

W

ma

Su

off

for

oth

dif

ed

of duc

the 11021 of i

wa

has

WI

W

Ne

wo

tho

wer

SHT]

the Fathers of the Church; unless they are said to enjoy a more abstracted and Spiritual Felicity (as they call it) and the other a more Gross and Corporeal; which, tho it is a stupid opinion, and much unworthy a Pious Soul; yet it doth not only obtain amongst the Mahometans, and most of the Indians at this time, but was a more Antient and Universal Doctrine, than is generally supposed.

The Opinions of the Antient Pythagoreans about the Transmigration of Souls into new Bodies, allude to this; so doth the Mystical Divinity of the Antient Poets, and that of the Brachmans and Bongi in the East-Indies, concerning the suture State of Souls; and according to their Opinion, those that have behaved themselves well in this Life, are Clothed with more Glorious Bodies, enjoy Pleasures and Delights, sar Superiour to ours; but on the contrary, their Souls are Transmigrated into Beasts. There is a place of the Learned Heinsius, in his Annotations on Abraham and Lazarus in the New Testament, where he Learnedly discusses many things on this Subject.

What I have already said, will be sufficient to prove it was the Opinion of the Antients, that the Gods had Bodies; lest the Humane Soul separated from this Body, should lose its Plastick Power, and being destitute of its most dear Associate, be idle and spend Ages in meer Contemplations; being totally incapable of performing its former Operations; and could not now, even so much as attempt a great many very good and useful things, which it used to do, by the assistance of the Body: for it was a question amongst them, whether the Soul was more perfect in its own Nature, or by the Ministration of Corporeity, which made them attribute

Chap. XI.

10

ld

91

n,

es,

to 1-

n-

nd

dly

to

the

ted

and

and ally

ns;

ot a

h it

or it

Soul

the

ttri-

bute

bute Bodies to their Gods, because neither the Soul without the Body, nor the Body without the Soul. were able to perform their proper Functions. own, that most abominable things are related of the Heathen Gods; but they were either Poetical Fictions, invented to expose the Gods of some other Country, or elfe were supposed to be committed by them whilft they lived here; and, if after they had obtain'd Immortality, they were amorous, and exceeded the bounds of Chaffity; they not only held, that all things were lawful for the Gods ; but by that means they got Herose, who far exceeded our weak and frail Natures, and came into the World for fome good and great end; and being made Men at first, at last became Gods themselves. Such Arguments as these, the Priests at that time offer'd in Vindication of their Lascivious Deities some whereof may pass as pleasant Excuses, yet others are so absurd and ridiculous, that not only discover the Frailties of the Gods, but seem designed to cover and conceal the Libidinous Wickedness of Men.

I shall add some few things more that may conduce to the better understanding of the Theology of the Antients, Cicero lib. 2. de N. D. Tays, They bare now in Greece, many Gods that were Men; Alabandas of Alabandus, Tenes of Tenedos, Leucothoe, who was formerly Ino, and her Son Palæmon; all Greece has an Hercules, Asculapius and the Tyndarides. Whence it is evident, that those Heroes or Gods were Worshipped in some Cities or Provinces which the Neighbouring Nations were Strangers to. There were also others Deified by the Universal consent of the People, Cicero lib. 1. de N. D. tells us who those were; Persens, a Disciple of Zeno, said, those were accounted Gods, who had invented things that were SHT? wery very advantagious and beneficial to Humane Life; and

vho

Apol Nar

wit Aga

ind

her

inte

he

Span

hav

am

vine

Glas

per thir

this

wit

and

Div

mai

Cit

Rit

Ho

nou

Cit

Arg

mn

ere

Ci

om

fell

Sic

cre

tha

tric

Maximus Tyrius Differ. 28.

The Greeks also Sacrificed to good Men, the Me mory of whose Virtues they Celebrated. The Greek were Prior to the Romans in this fort of Worshin and the Egyptians to them, in whose Shop this Re ligious Adoration of Men was first Forged: The Ifis and Ofiris were nothing better, before they De fied them, and called the Stars by their Names for which Reason I must dissent from Salust, who fays, The Inhabitants of Crete first invented Religion for Religion neither forung from the Jupiter of Cree or from any other Island in the whole World for if by the word Religion is meant the Interna Adoration of the Supream God, by Virtue and Pie ty, that could not have its Original from Crete, for it is Written in the Hearts of Men: And again, if by it is understood External Rites and Ceremonies. and the manner of Worshipping these Factitions Deities, and the Sacerdotal Inventions, which indeed is the genuine fense of the Word, neither did that come from Crete; for I have fufficiently proved, that these Parts of Religion came from Egypt and Greece. I shall now proceed after Voffun, who hath taken great pains in collecting them, and fays fomething briefly concerning fome other Deified Men, fuch as were the Balacides in Sicily, and perhaps Marcellus, for mention is made of the Marcelleis, in Honour of him. Caftor and Pulla, called the Tyndarides, were in the Peloponne fius, and atterwards over all Greece and other Nations, but not they only, as in Cicero lib. 2. de N. D. likewise And kes, but whether Anac, Enac, or the Anakim of the Hebrews have any relation to them (in segard the Original of the Word is entirely Greek) I shall was accounted Gods, who had invented animoso bestimoso The eek nip

Re

neir

)ei-

es;

on;

rete,

ld;

na

for

ies,

OUS

in-

her

ntly

om

Tus,

and

)ei-

and

the

lux,

af-

not 716-

10 ard

hall

The

The Lacedemonians had an Heroe called Hyacinthus whose Rites were celebrated at the Festivals of Apollo, or rather Apollo was Worshipped under his Name; at which time they went in Procession with Ivy Garlands, after the Custom of Bacchus, Agamemnon, Menelaus, and Helena were Worshipped. nd the and her Husband had Divine Honours paid hem. Mocrates, Encom. Helen: Not as unto Heroes, but into Gods; which also makes the distinction between the Worship of Heroes and Gods, very evident. The Spartans Dedicated a Temple to Lycurgus, as we have it in Plutarch, Leonidas and Barsidas, had the ame Honours paid them. The Messenians paid Divine Worship to Polycaon the Son of Leleges, and to Glaucus and others; yet the Parentalia were only perform'd to Euritus; which in my Opinion is the third and last Degree of Honour paid to Men after this Life; yet Cicero fays, they were often mixt with Supplications. The Arcadians accounted Arcas and Califto amongst the Stars, and decreed Aristens Divine Honours, because he taught them how to manage and preserve Bees, as Servius says. Citizens of Mantinea in Arcadia, instituted Annual Rites and Quinquennial Sports, to be perform'd in Honour of Antinous before-mentioned; Divine Honours were paid to Anius or Elius, Founder of the City of Elis. Perseus was made a Constellation by the Argives, and Ador'd for a Deity. Lynceus and Hypermnestra had a Shrine built them, and a Temple was erected at Epidaurus, for Asculapius, but without the City, as in Ambracia and Rome; perhaps judging it ominous, to bring a Physitian God into the City it lelf, lest he should increase the Number of the Sick, to have more frequent opportunities of increasing his Glory. These are the most remarkable that had Divine Honours paid them in those Countries.

I

P

İ

8

I shall add some few more, that obtain'd, either Divine Honours, or those paid to Heroes, or Wor. thip; for I diftinguish between them and those to whom the Cultus or Worship Divine was paid by the Heathers. Amphilochus, a Prophet of Acarnania, whose Oracle was Celebrated in Atolia, according to Aristides in his Asclepiades, in the Attick or Boetick Orepus, and in Athens it felf, where also Cecrops, who is faid to be changed into the Sign Aquaring and his Daughters were Worshipped. Ceneus, and Triptolemus the Inventor of the Plough: Amphilyon, who was made a Conffellation, and called, Heniochus, or Auriga, from the Invention of the Chariot; leaving being instructed in the Art of making Wine, by Bacchus; and Erigone translated into the Sign Virgo, for her extraordinary Piety to her Father, tho others fay, it was in Honour of another Erigone. Erycthers, and his Daughters, for their Loyalty to their Country. Perdix, Lacus, Alemena, Androgens, and Thefens, who had many Shrines in Athens, alfo Connidas his School-Mafter, and Hercules who was his Companion, and Hebe who was given him in Marriage; Iolans, Menesthens, and Codrus, who devoting himself to the Service of his Country, defervedly acquir'd a place amongst the Heroes; Pohanus, lib. 1. St. Aug. lib. 18. de Civ. Dei, fays, that Sacrifices were offerd unto him. Some Achieved Divine, or the Honour due to Heroes under the Ar-chontes, Toxaris the Seythian, and Penops the Attick Heroe, who had a Shrine Statue and Fountain, as Helychius fays. There is a Shrine of Amphiaraus, whom the Inhabitants of Oropius in Beotia, first Deified. Neoptolemus was Worshipped by the Adelphians: The Bautians had other Detties; as Ino, and Melicerta, and Hercules the Theban, Thefens's Friend, whom Homer describes, in whose Honour a Festival and Sports were

131

)r-

to

he

ia,

ng

ick

ps,

Ms,

nd

d,

12-

ng

he a-

rer

Y-

ln-A-

les

en

us,

0-lat.

ed

17-

ick

25

m d.

he nd le-

IS

n-

instituted. Here also Trephonius, famous for a Cave, Democrates, Cyclaus, and Leucus, were Worshipped. Pelens and Chiron, in Theffaly. Aneas in Macedonia; Aristotle amongst the Stagyrites, whose Festival, Ammonins in his Life mentions, unless it should be Philoponus. Vossius is of Opinion, that Divine Honours were paid to Aristotle. Philip and Alexander the Great, were Worshipped in Macedonia: Justin. lib. 24. writes doubtfully concerning this Matter. Miltiades was Worshipped by the Inhabitants of Cherso. and Achilles in Leuce, where he has a Temple, famous for its Anathema's. The Thasians Ador'd Theaginas the Wrestler: It is not determined, whether the Lesbians Worshipped the Nine Muses, or Mysa, that was Educated according to their direction. Aristaus was Honoured at Chios, and Drimacus the Commander of Fugitives. The Samians had Lysander in Veneration; the People of Tenedos, Calliftagoras; the Naxians, Ariadne; the Inhabitants of Salamine, paid Divine Honours to their Fellow-Citizen Ajax, the Son of Telamon; Lacus had the same in Eginum; Homer was Worshipped in one of the Cyclades called Ios, which makes Varro of Opinion, that it was his Country; In Astypalæa, they Worship'd Cleomedes the Wrestler; the Cretans, Europa her Brother Cadmus, also Idomeneus and Molone, Minos's Grand-Children, paying them Divine Honours by Sacrifices, and invoking them in time of War; allo Epimenides and Theognetes the Champion. All whose Lives and Actions I could wish were delivered down to us; for they cannot be judg'd unworthy of History, whom the Antients thought worthy of Divine or Heroical Honours. Vossius hath collected somewhat in this nature, but not sufficient to display their Virtues, which are conceal'd by the injury of Time. So much for the Indigetes and others, thers, whom the Heathens generally call'd, Dii Minorum Gentium.

af th w

W

C

I

fo

W

8

11

C

A

W

0

91

f

CHAP. XII.

Concerning the Worship of the Gods, called, Consentes & Dij Majorum Gentium.

THE Gods were so numerous amongst the Heathens, that not only every Region and Province, but every Island and almost little River, had their own Country Deities, lest they should seem to be out-done by their Neighbours; so that at last they began to dispute about Priority of Worship.

To end this dispute, it was concluded by the Romans and others, that some should be established, as Dii Majorum Gentium, much Superiour in Power and Dignity to the Dii Minorum Gentium, who were called, Heroes, Semidei, and Semones. Planciades fays, There were some that the Antients did not judge worthy of Heaven, on account of their stender merit, nor would they determine them to the Earth, in Veneration to their Virtues; therefore they called them Semoves, Semi-homines, Half-Men, something different from the Semidei. Varra divides them into two Classes; some he calls Dii Certi, others Incerti: He accounts those Certi to whom the Romans had erected Publick Edifices, or Temples, and had Adorn'd them with a great many Images. The Incerti, were those of whom no just Reason can be rendered who they were: Cicero (as we mention'd before) divided them otherwise; those who always Inhabited Heawen, were called, Dii Majorum Gentium; such whole merits had advanc'd them thither, who were called, Semia riods

Semi-dei, and Indigetes; and a third, of those by whose affiftance, Men have admittance into Heaven; as the Mind, Virtue, Piety, Faith, Hope, of each of which in their Place; in regard it will tend very much to elucidate the Ethnick Theology, who those Dii Majorum Gentium were, who more particularly were called Confentes, being allowed by common confent; we have in Ennius, Juno, Vesta, Minerva, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Neptune, Vulcan, Apollo.

To these twelve (fix Males, and as many Females) some add eight more, (Janus, Saturn, Orcus, Bacchus, were the Principal amongst them) and so made the Number twenty; their Names are, Janus, Jupiter, Saturn, Genius, Mercury, Appollo, Mars, Vulcan, Neptune, the Sun, Orcus, Bacchus the Father, the Earth, Ceres, Juno, the Moon, Diana, Minerva, Venus, Vesta; twelve Males, and eight Females.

10

le. i-

2 of

ey

ed

a-

ole

ed, 1117

The Dii Consentes, were accounted of Jupiter's Privy Council, when any Grand Affairs were Debated; they also had Golden Statues set up in the Forum. The rest of the Dii Majorum Gentium, were the Nobility of the Celeftial Kingdom. Those called Minorum Gentium, were inferiour to these; amongst whom were the Indigetes. There was also a Plebs, or Commonalty amongst the Gods; so the Poet, Vas quoque Plebs Superum, &c. of which in its Place.

I have spoken of most of these Gods before, yet I shall add something here, the better to explain their Mystical Theology; but so that their History, or rather Fables feem dress'd up by the Poets or Priests; nay, perhaps by their old Women, and told to their young Grand-Children; tho' there is some Truth intermixt with these Fictions; but it is almost

most impossible to discover it, amongst so many dark and inconsistent Stories. I hope therefore my Reader will be satisfied, if I endeavour to collect what Remains there are, in the best of Authors concerning the Gods before-mention'd.

The Dii Consentes, or Selecti, were fuch as the Heathens, for their great Merits, had advanc'd into the Number of the Gods, and had feveral Degrees of Adoration paid them, fo that they put up Prayers, and made Vows unto them. The Heathens did not only believe, that Men in this Life (as Kings and Magistrates) preside over others, by the appointment of the Supream God; but that Heroes, when they obtain'd Heaven, had the Charge committed to them, to Manage and Direct all Humane Affairs; the Supream God permitting it to be fo, to free himfelf from Care and Trouble; and that it was fufficient for him to have establish'd Laws, and a certain Order of things from the Beginning, by which they should be Govern'd in all Ages, and to leave the Administration and Management of them to these Heroes, who were Punish'd and Rewarded by those Laws (as we Mortals are) as occasion requires. This was necessary, lest they should be Idle and Lazy in Heaven it felf, and regardless of Humane Affairs; still the Management of all, was ultimately resolv'd into the Supream God; tho' from the Principles of this Theology, the Heathens might transfer the Worship of the Supream God, that was so Universally acknowledg'd, to Inferiour Deities; their Priefts Studying only to amuse the Minds of the People with strange and uncertain Stories, which according to their Explication were full of Mysteries, and contain'd many things above the apprehension of the Vulgar; all which they boaftingly pretended were confirm'd by the Oracle of that God, whole Priests

tl

li

in

m

he

0

1-

n

18

se se

(e

25.

bc

ne

cihe

al-

efts

ories,

on led

ole

ests

Priests they were; but more of this in its proper Place.

SATURN

Saturn was the most Antient of all the Heathen Gods; for, tho Janus is esteem'd the God of Gods; it is to be understood Mystically, signifying all Time, both Past and Present. That plensiful Race of Gods, which Tertullian calls the Sow of Divinity, is said to proceed from Saturn and Ops: It is not evident from the Antients, whether his Name or Sir-name was Saturn; but it is very probable, as Jupiter by the Name of Pater Juvans, was a common Name to very many; so Saturn, whose Name, according to Joseph Scaliger, signifies Absconding, may be applicable to several Men; for those Deities, who were Conversant on Earth, proceeded from some God that lay conceal'd.

This feems to be confirmed by the great number of Jupiters and Saturns amongst them. The Book De Aquivocis, of whom Xenophon is supposed the Author, says, that The Saturns were the first of the Families of Kings and Noblemen who built Cities. Vossius is of opinion Saturn was Adam; another Noah, and that Abraham was worshipped under that Name. Christophorus d Castro says, Moloch was the same with Saturn; thence Sanchoniathon in Euseb. represents him with two Faces; and if Saturn was Noah, then he must also by some be esteemed Janus; and from hence it is most probable that he had two Faces. Virgil gives us a very excellent account who Saturn was, from the Opinion of the Antients.

Saturn descends from his Olympian Throne, T' avoid the Fury of his enrag'd Son.

Man-

CISII.

They

Elian.

Mankind till then dispers'd on Mountains high, By Laws he brought to love Society; Calling the Country Latium, 'cause He, Absconded there in great Security; The Golden Age was in his Government, When Men enjoy'd Peace, Plenty and Content.

Saturn was represented holding a Scyckle in his hand; either to reap with, or because he was the Inventor of Agriculture and the use of Dung; or else from his Mystical Name Chronus, (Time) which like a Scyckle cuts down all things living. Scarce a Grammarian but hath ingeniously expounded the Fable of Saturn devouring his Children. Of these Jupiter, Juno, Neptune and Pluto still remained, to whom (as Ishewed before) Mythologists give the Superintendency over the Four Elements. For the Antient Poets (and that not abfurdly) held that Saturn had Power and Jurisdiction over things compounded of the Four Elements; but could not abolish or destroy the Elements themselves.

The Antients paid a very profound Adoration to Saturn, particularly the Carthaginians and Gauls, and many other Western Nations, and thought to render him propitious by Humane Sacrifices; as we have it in Dion. Hal. lib. 1. who farther says, Hercules abolished this Custom, and built an Altar on the Hill of Saturn, where holy Sacrifices were burnt by pure Fires. Those Sacrifices by the Greeks called Thymata Hagia and Thymata, as the Scholiast on Thucydides has it, were things made by Bakers in the shape of Animals, which were offered up to the Gods. Dion. Halicarnasseus calls these things Images like Men. Ovid. de Fasti lib. 5. tells us of such things made of Straw and Rushes:

anoid the Easy of the energy & Son.

They Strawy Nobles in the Water throw.

And a little after:

A Rushy Image Tyber does receive.

This was performed off the Bridge by a Virgin (faith the same Author) perhaps in the stead of Men above Sixty, who were called Depontani. Oscilla, were small Images offered to Saturn. Italy abounded every where with his Shrines, and some Cities, Rocks, and Tombs were called by his Name, as appears by Dion. Hal. lib. 1. Tatius built a Temple to Saturn; he alfo. fays A. Sempronius Atratinus and M. Minutius, dedicated a Temple to Saturn, and inftituted publick Feafts and Sacrifices every Year, in honour of him. Macrobius tells us, Tullus Hostilius in pursuance of a Vow confecrated a Shrine to Saturn, and then the Saturnalia were first instituted in Rome. Saturn's Temple was on the Capitoline Hill; and P. Valerius Publicola made either that or another the Publick Treasury, because there were no Thests committed in his time. All Ambassadors that came to Rome from any place. went thither; all Records of Contracts, and whatever Parents promised when they took up A custom atheir Children; and the Names of all the mongst the Ro-Citizens of Rome were written down, mans. and preserved here in the Elephantine Books. nius mentions Two Temples built by Munacius Planmeemed Goddelfes in the time Mythical terree. w

They facrificed to Saturn bare-headed, and to all other Deities cover'd. I might give many reasons for this Custom, but shall proceed. The Statues of Saturn were always bound fast with Cords, and untied on his Festivals, in commemoration of that Security and Happiness Men enjoy'd under him.

th

an

Pe

in

he

fic

fu

H

tu

m

C

T

in

R

in

C

T

CI

te

h af

B

A

h

n

Some I carele

nobius contr. Gent. fays, That Saturn was bound for his Parricide, and only let loofe on days devoted to him. I shall not rehearse all the Fabulous Stories that are extant concerning Saturn and his Children, as the most antient Deities; for the more antient the God, the more Fictions are reported of him; and it was neither easy nor fase, to convince the common People of the contrary. Cicero fays, It's very difficult not to believe those things that claim a Divine Original, though there be neither Argument nor Reason to confirm them: and adds, they were produced from the Ocean and the Salacious Power of Heaven, generated by the Conception of the Earth. Amongst these were Phoreys, Saturn and Ops; but who this Phoreys was, I am altogether ignorant, unless he was the Father of Medula, and thereby the Power of Petrification Poetically meant. I now proceed to Ops. issu, and then the Satur-

OPS.

OPS, was both Sister and Wise to Saturn; and called the Great Mother, the Mother of the Gods and Benesynthia. Virgil. Eneid. 6.

With Towers crown'd Great Berecynthia Thro Phrygian Towns her Glory does difflay; An hundred Grandson Gods her Off-spring are.

Ops, Cybele, Vesta, Rhea, Ceres, and others, were essemed Goddesses in the same Mystical sense; as they either signified the Earth, or things that were were produced out of it. Homer calls her Zodoron, the Bestower of Life; and Hesiod Eyrysternon, having a broad Breast. She rode in a Chariot drawn by Lionesses (as was said before) which formerly were Hippomanes and Atalanta; but according to the Poets, metametamorphos'd into Lionesses, for their contempt of this Deiry. The Chariot was cover'd with Cloth. and it was effected the greatest Impiety for any Person but the Priest to touch it; he alone knowing that the Goddess was there: She had a Key in her hand, to intimate her Power of obstructing or furthering all the Fruits of the Earth. They facrificed Swine to her, because they were the most fruitful Animals. Tacitus fays, The Germans paid Divine Honours to her; but having neither Temples nor Statues, they worshipped her in Groves. Her. lib. 5. mentions the burning of a Temple of the Goddess Cybele, a native: And Dion. Hal. lib. 8. tells us of the Temple of the Earth. Pliny reports that the Summer in which the Mother of the Gods was brought to Rome, they had a much more plentiful Harvest than in former Years. I shall omit what is reported of Claudia drawing her with a Rope, as too trivial. The same Author mentions a wonderful Cave facred to her, into which none but her Priest durst enter. I have discoursed on her Sirnames before.

JUPITER.

The Poets say, We should begin with Jupiter: for tho' Saturn was prior with respect to time, yet Jupiter transcended all the other Gods in Dignity; tho' they also represent him an Infant sucking, and he and his Sister Juno sitting in Fortune's Lap, greedy after the Breast; yet the Matrons of Rome had then a most prosound Veneration for him, as Cicero says. But I am of opinion he was the first God that the Antients ever adored bawling in a Cradle, before he had performed any noble Exploit; for they could not be very fond of such a snivelling Deity.

Some

Some things are related Historically, others Morally, and others Myftically concerning him; neither would the Priefts diffinguish betwixt them, judging it more to their purpose, that the People should constantly have recourse to them for their Explication. It was also the Policy of those in Authority, that the Common People should be in a kind of suspense. and not overburdened with Superstitious Ceremonies, which might divert their Minds from the Obfervation of the Civil Laws. They were not in the least averse that something doubtful and uncertain, others that had an appearance of Truth, and some notorious Falshoods should be mixed in matters of Religion, as knowing how great a Veneration the ignorant Vulgar had for what was oracularly pronounced by the Prieft; unless there was some allay in it that might abate its Credit, and put a stop to that luxuriant Progress of Religion, which, as abfurd and false as it was, had gained a mighty Influence and Authority over the Minds of Men. Perhaps they thought that as Iron was necessary as well as Steel to make a useful Sword; so a just mixture would produce the best Temperature in matters of Religion, and make it bear the better edge: Thus many things were foifted in that were very incongruous, to imply fomething that was Dark and Mysterious; for those things that were most perfect would require none of their Affistance. But how much those Heterodox Notions obstructed true Religion, I shall discourse hereafter.

There were many Jupiters amongst the Antients. Varro says, he found Three hundred who were worshipped in some place or other. Some say there was not an Age before the Trojan War, but had its Jupiter. Jupiter Cretensis, was the most remarkable, tho younger than Jupiter Argivus; of whom Diodorus Si-

CHIAS

culm

ntber

trodi

forbe

enti

ba

ily Vick

most

Robb

who

whil

Vaac

T

ises :

nant irin

iter

0171 nun

ot

hey

ure Pas

Vrit

riel ( ivi,
ho

de

He

th

no

culm says; This God exceeded all others in Fortitude and other Virtues; for possessing the Throne after Saturn, he introduced many things very beneficial to human Life: He exhorted Men to maintain Justice amongst each other; to sorbear lujuries and Oppression, preventing Strife and Contentions by his judicious Determinations, and promoted what soever might conduce to their living quietly and hap-hily; incouraging the Good to Virtue, and restraining the Wicked by Threats and Punishments. He went over almost the whole World, and declared War against impious Robbers; he entroduced Laws and Justice. This Jupiter, who, according to some, was preserved by the Curetes whilst he was an Infairt, slourished about the time of Mase and Faceb.

There was another Jupiter Cretenfis, called Afteim also, who stole Europa, and had Minos, Rhadananthus and Surpedon by her. Minos the Eldeft, reiring into a Cave in Mount Ida, reported that Juiter communicated his Laws to him there; as Numa compilies afterwards boafted that he had his comnunicated to him by the Nymph Ageria: for it was not sufficient to enact just and good Laws, unless hey produced the Authority of some God to proare their Sanction. This way of introducing Laws as customary amongst the Indians likewise, as the riters of those Countries testify, to pals by the Gaiel of Mahomer. There were two Jupiters called Arvi, for which I refer you to the Learned Voffice, ho hath recorded all the Jupiters that can be colded out of the principal Authors extant amongst I proceed to his Sirnames, Temples and Altars. Hercules erected an Altar to Jupiter the Inventor, afon for the Slaughter with the River-water. Herod. al. lib. 1. he also mentions a Temple of Jupiter Perim, built by Romulus 15 foot long. Livy fays,

This was the First Temple that was consecrated at Rome; Augustus repair d it when it was almost ruind by Time. The Romans formerly took his Scepter by which they swore, and the Flint with which they struck and confirmed Leagues. Dion. gives us this Historical and Moral Sense of the word Feretrius, Romulus dedicated the Arms of the Casenians, whom he conquer'd to Jupiter Feretrius (as if deriv'd from the Greek Hyperpheretren) because encompassing every where both the Nature and Motion of all things, he

Ri

hai

wa

Gre

oth

he

wh

inst

he

erb

but ville

Peo

ure

he

ind

cbu

ellin

Reb

he (

burn Pilla Com

veré

he c

D. M

vith

reate

confu

hey e n thi hey v

orm.

had the pre-eminence over all things.

Romulus built a Temple to Jupiter Stator, upon this occasion: The Sabines having put the Ramans to flight and Romulus with them, he lifting up his hands to Heaven, implor'd this Gods Affiftance, and made a Vow to build him a Temple, faying; Jupiter, it was by the command of thy Birds that I first laid the Foundation of this City here in the Palatine; the Sabines are in possession of the Tower, which they have purchased with villainy; inspire the Romans with Courage, that they may stand and rally; I vow to build thee a Temple here by the Name of Stator. His Prayers being ended, the Re mans flood their ground, and beliaved themselve very bravely, Dion, lib. 2. So much for the Historica meaning of the Word. Seneca gives us a Mystica Senfe; Taying, He was called Stator, because by hi Power all things flood. Cicero tells us, That the Se nate met sometimes in this Temple, and made Law There was another Temple built to Jupin Stator. Jupiter Elicius, of whom I spoke before, ha a Temple; he was so called, because by the All stance of the Priests he gave Answers there. A nobius recites a very pleasant Dialogue betwixt J piter and Numa, upon this account; which Plutar hath also in his Life. Livy says, That Tullus Holl lius and his whole Family were burnt with Ligh

5,

m

m

IJ

he

his

to ads

ade

Was

da-

e in

vith

the Robelves rical fical tical with the See Law upine Affi

A t J

utar

Ho

Ligh

nin

ning, for neglecting the Performance of his Sacred Jupiter Capitolinus, was had in greatest Veneration : having the Appellation of Most Good and Great: he was called Most Good before he had the Title of Most Great: the one the result of his Munificence, the other of his Power. He was named Gapitolinus from the Capitoline Hill formerly abounding with Trees. where a Temple was built him, and Divine Worship instituted. Tarquinius Priscus vowed this Temple in he Sabine War, but Servius Tullius and Tarquinius Suberbus after him, finisht it with the Enemies plunder but after the Expulsion of the Kings, Horatius Pulvillus dedicated it with such Magnificence, that the People of Rome afterwards bestowed immense Treaure in adorning rather than augmenting it. he space of 415 Years this Temple was burnt down, and 7. Scipio and C. Norbanus being Confuls, it was rebuilt by the same Methods. This remained till Viellius his Time, and was intirely demolished in those Rebellions and Seditions. Vespasian built it up from he Ground again, but at his death it was fired and ournt down. Domitian rebuilt it a fourth time; its Pillars and Gilding cost 12 thousands Talents. Compass of this Temple was Eight Acres. were two Crowns of Gold kept in it; one the Gauls, he other the Carthaginians, consecrated to Jupiter D. M. But the Sybils Books were preserved there with the utmost Veneration, being esteemed of the reatest Authority amongst the Romans, who always consulted them in dubious matters; from whence hey either guess'd or discover'd future Events. When he Emperours went to War, they made their Vows this Temple, and if they returned Conquerours, ney were carried in Triumph thither again, to perum their Vows and Sacrifice to Jupiter. Whence t was that the Statue of Jupiter Imperator stood there and the Senate was convened there sometimes. Performs steps there all night upon a Religious account and to prognosticate things to come by their Dreams of which Custom I have spoken before. Jupiter was represented holding a Thunderbolt in his hand which he was believed to throw.

I might add more concerning Jupiter O. M. especially of his Mystical Worship, but I have only shewed something here, to prepare my way to handle the Argument more at large in a Chapter of the Suprem God. Let me observe by the way, That Jupiter was never used by the Heathens for a Name, but a Common only: they meaning only Jupiners Pater (an assisting Father) by it, from whence it came to pass there were so many Jupiters: others derive it from Jao, but this I have treated of before, and shall add somewhat hereaster.

the to

fore

wa:

Age

ten

bab

for rou foll

the

Syri

Bui

LTIST

fan

Son

the

WO

Wit

C

dere

fon.

a M

the

bot

There was a Temple facred to Jupiter Latiali, built by Tarquinius Superbus, being for those times most Magnisicent Structure, and for a most wife and prudent Defign. Dion. Halicar. lib. 4. for Nation otherwise different having some Vicinity, with repect to their Religious Rites, especially the Latines Volfei and Hernici. Tarquin, being King of the La tines, sent Ambassadors to the Volsei and Hernici, de firing their Acquaintance and Friendship; proposing amongst other things, that a Temple might be ered ed in common to them all, where they might mee every Year in a Solemn manner, feaft together, and perform the facred Mysteries; which being accept ed, there was a Temple built to Jupiter Latialis, 2 most in the Heart of those Nations; over which the Romans presided, and Feasts were instituted by the fame Name. Dion. Hal. lib. 8. fays, The fame Tarquit began to build a Temple in the City to Ais wind but Sp. Posthumius dedicated it afterwards to Jupiter Fidei, or Sponfor.

e;

Dt.

ns; Vas

nd,

W-

723

08-

20 pas

OM

add

alis.

es 4

vife

On

rel

nes,

L

de

ing

ed

nee

2110 epi al th

bu

To this the Jupiter Horcius of the Greeks, mentioned by Cartarius, has reference; Jupiter Lapis has some relation to it also; because in ratifying Leagues, they held a Flint in their hands, pronouncing thele words. If I knowingly deceive, may Deispiter, (the Father of the Gods) cast me out of this place, and from the Society of good Men, as I do this Stone. A Temple was built o Jupiter Victor, on the Palatine Hill. There was allo Jupiter Lucetius, called so from the Light he affords Mortals, by which without question the Sun was fignified. Diespiter also is the same, according to Agellius and Servius, whose Temple was placed in the tenthQuarter of the City by P. Victor. Jupiter in all probability may be the same as the Sun, or Sol Heliogabalus; for which fee Salmafius his Annotations on the Emperour Heliogabalus; and our Countryman Fuller, who following Porphyrius, makes Elagabalus or Heliogabalus, the same as Sol Opifex, or Maker of the Universe; the Syriack word Gabal, and the Arabick Gabil, fignifies a Builder; to which agrees that the same Sun is called under convuirues in the greatest Obelisque which Confantine the Great commanded to be carried to Rome: Some are of opinion that Elagabalus is only a God of the Mountain, or a God-mountain; from the Arabick word Gebel a Mountain, but this gains little credit with me.

Octavius Augustus built a Temple to Jupiter the Thunderer in the Capitol, for which Suetonius gives the reason. There was also another to Jupiter Genetius, from a Mountain or River of that Name hard-by, which the Scholiast on Apollonius Rhodius, and Strabo lib. 6: both mention.

0 1

and blacks

There

Cha

mac

nalis

owi

tion

nish

Lav

thir

was gre:

mal

Voll

Aug

One

for cre

cau

ing

Fig

We

chu

She

Cor

faci

ren

bul

cal

to hin

far

fta

the rio

he

There was a Temple to Jupiter the Avenger, which is called the Pantheon, or of all Gods; it was confecrated by Agrippa, it is now called All-Saints; and from its Circular Form Santta Maria Rotunda. It was built first for Cybele; I saw it when I was at Rome, the Pillars that were before the Porch being sunk very deep into the Ground by Earthquakes. For whereas formerly there were twelve Steps to ascend into this Temple, now (says Marcellinus) you descend by as many. Fabricius gives us a very elegant Description of it, and says, Agrippa would have put Augustus's Statue there, and attributed the Honour of the Work to him; but he refusing both he placed the former Cæsar's Statue in the Pantheon it self, and Augustus.

fus's in the Porch.

Domitian at first built a small Chapel in the Capitol to Jupiter Custos, and afterwards a vast Temple to Jupiter Conservator, where he consecrated himself in the Bosom of the God, as it is in Tacitus. some of Dioclesian's Medals there is Jupiter holding out Victory with his Right-hand, and a Spear upright in his Lest, with this Inscription, four Conservators Orbis, to Jupiter the Preserver of the World. Jupiter the Arbitrator had a Temple in the Tenth Quarter of the City; and Jupiter Propugnator in the Palace, as appears by an antient Inteription: Jupiter Pugnans also; we read of an Altar of Jupiter Faunus in Dion. Hal. lib. 6. Suidas mentions Jupiter Hercam, which Budeus renders Septitius: He had an Altar built him within the Court or Hall of some Private Houses; and who ever had Jupiter Hercaus, had the Right of Citizens; Calius Rhodiginus fays, he was represented with three Eyes, and subjoins the Explication of this Mystery. Plutarch tells us, that many great Honours were paid to Jupiter Hospitalis. Jupiter Terminalis had Divine Honours paid him. Numa made made and established a Law called Lex Terminalis, that the Romans should be content with their own Laws, and not be desirous of those of other Nations: Dion. Hal. lib. 2. gives an Account of the Punishments that were inslicted on the Violarers of this Law. Jupiter Pradator also had a Temple, and somethings was due to him out of all Plunders. There was the Temple of Jupiter Olympius, to which was great resort out of Greece, every one contending to make the noblest Present. For Jupiter Ammon, see ch lend

Vossius de Idol. lib. I.

as

ne,

nk

10

nd

nd e-

10

[-

4.

ale

If

n

g

1t

78

VS

Jupiter had many more Sirnames, all which, as St. Augustin lib. 7. de Civit. Dei says, were attributed to One God, for different Powers and Causes, &c. for this also consult Lud. Vives. The Eagle was sacred to Jupiter on a double account; Mystically, because he can look full into the Sun; Poetically, being reported to have brought Jupiter Arms in his Fight with the Titans. The Oak and Olive Tree were sacred to him; but the Oak is dedicated to Backing, Rhea and Ceres also. The Sacrifices were a She-goat, two Lambs, a white Bull with gilt Horns; the Romans sometimes sacrificed nothing but Bread-Corn, Salt and Frankincense to him. The Athenians sacrificed an Ox only, but with most ridiculous Geremonies, as you may see in Pausanias.

It is impossible to enumerate all things that are fabulously reported, Historically written, or Mystically compos'd concerning Jupiter. It may suffice to have shewn, that some of the Heathers esteem'd him, the Original and Father of Gods and Men, as far as relates to the Sun: tho' by Jupiter some understand the Ether only; but the generality neither of them, but esteem Jupiter the Supream Deity, Superior to the Sun, administring and governing all things here, and dispensing all good to Mortals, by which

0 4

cri

of

his

Pa

He

ma

ob

an

on a S

He

to

Wa

Ot

He

the

an

to

Je

fac

the

Bi

the

titt

at in the

der

ing

he is distinguish'd from Vejupiter (whom Martian calls Vedios also) called so as Agellius says, because he had only Power to hurt: for as they worshipp'd some Gods, that they might bestow Blessings on them; so they endeavour'd to appeale and pacify others, that they might not hurt them. This Deity was called Vejupiter, because he had no Power to assist; the Particle Ve signifying Privation. The Temple of this God was between the Tower and the Capitol, where his Image was, holding Arrows ready to do' Mischies; just by stood the Figure of a Goat, which they us'd to sacrifice to him. Agellius says, some thought he was Apollo: Martian will have him to be Pluto; whoever he was, it was generally believed that he hurt none but the Villainous and Perjur'd.

I shall treat more at large on this Subject, when I come to discourse of the Principle of Good and Evil amongst the Heathers; where I shall also shew what they thought of the Supream God, for the most part Mystically shadowed under the Name of Jupiter.

anioh for my of UNO.

Jupiter's Wife is next, tho' the Antient Heathers have represented Jupiter himself with his Head bound, and groaning like a Woman amongst the Goddesses who came to be assistants at his Labour, when he brought forth Liber Pater or Bacchus. Pliny lib. 25. June is only called Jupiter's Wife, tho' she was his Sister also. It is no strange thing that Jupiter should bear a Child, for the Eastern and Western People attributed both Sexes to their Gods. June, as well as Jupiter, is so called a juvando, from Assisting. She being his Sister, Mystically represents to us the near Relation and Conjunction between the Ather and the Air; viz. Jupiter and June, according to the Opinion of the Stoicks.

Stoicks, Cic. lib. 2. de N. D. In the Comment of Theocritten, we have the Story, how Jupiter under the form of a Cuckow flew into Juno's Lap, and returning to his proper Shape, promis'd her Marriage. This Passage in Virgil is to be understood Mystically,

With joy descends into his Spouse's Lap.

Her Statue did not represent one Goddess only, but many (as Cartarius has it.) for there is manifeftly observable something of Pallas, Venus, Diana, Nemesis, and the Parca, and several others in it. She fat upon two Lions, holding a Scepter in one hand, and a Shuttle in the other, with Rays of Glory about her Head, and many other things that properly belonged to other Deities. Lucian from hence shews that she was worship'd and honour'd under different Names. Others describe her Statue with a Rainbow about her Head. Iris was the Daughter of Thaumantia, and by the Antients efteem'd the Messenger of Juno or the Air; being the fign of fair Weather, after Clouds and Rain. The Peacock was held facred to her. Pau-Sanias fays, The Emperour Adrian offer'd a Peacock to her made of Gold, adorn'd with most splendid Jewels. There was a fort of Hawk and Vultur effeem'd facred to her by the Agyptians, according to Elian; they crowned their Is with the Feathers of this Bird, in whom many Deities were included, whom the Greeks and Romans worship'd separately. Geese too were facred to Juno; the Romans to shew their Gratitude for the Preservation of the Capitol, kept some at the publick Charge, and carried one every Year in pomp, fitting on a Couch richly adorn'd, and at the same time they ran a Dog through with an Elder-stake, to shew their punishment for the ill guarding the Tower, The

n

15

d

t-

g

2-

۲,

10

The Greeks called Juno Era, which is Aër by transposing the Letters, as Athenagoras observes. It's probable that from thence she was called Sospita, because different Effects, proceed from the different Temperature of the Air, and very often Distempers, as Experience tells us, without consulting Hippocrates or Galen.

Funo had many Sirnames. Juno the Queen, her Statue was brought from the Vejentes, when Camillus was Dictator, and dedicated on the Aventine Hill by the Matrons. Livy and Plutarch tell a very pleasant Story concerning this, and her Answer, in a very ferious manner; who also affirm, that this Statue or Image was in fuch Veneration, that no Person durst touch it besides the Priest of a particular Nation. Camillus afterwards dedicated a Temple to her on the Aventine Hill, as Flaminius did another in the Capitol in the War with the Ligures. Juno is also called Caprotina, from the Wild-fig Tree; from whence fome Servant Maids formerly gave the Romans a Signal by which they overcame their Enemies, for which read Macrobius. She is called Juno Moneta, a monendo, from Advising, says Cicero de Divinatione; and Livy, whom I take to be of better Authority than Suidas. Books called Lintei, which were faid to contain the · Fate of the Roman Empire, were preserved in her Temple. She was also called Juno Sospita; she had three Temples, one built at Lanuvium, and two at Rome: her Statue had a Goat's Skin on it, a Spear, a fmall Shield, and Slip-shoes.

The Consuls at their entrance into their Office did facrifice to Juno Sospita, Cicero pro Murana. She had the Name of Juno Lucina, from giving Light to Newborn Children, according to some; and others derive it from Lucus a Grove, where her Temple was built. Lucius Piso Annal. 1. says, Servius Tullius the

King,

fe

to

to fe

di

King that he might know the number of Inhabitants in the City, the Births, Burials, and those that put on the Toga Virilis, order'd how much Money every one should bring in for Births, into the Treasury of Ilitbya, whom, according to Dion. Hal. the Romans called Lucina: into that of Venus, who is called Libitina, for Burials: and the Treasury of Juventus or Youth, for those that assumed the Toga Virilis. . She was called Juno Juga (according to some) because by the Custom of the Antients, those that married were tied together: from whence comes the word Conjux, a Wife; she had an Altar in a Street called Jugarius for that reason. She was called Sororia Julia and Martialis; and had Altars and Temples dedicated to her by those Names.

d

V-

e-

25

he

ıg,

The Bridegroom and Bride used to sacrifice to Juno Pronuba, taking out the Gall, and throwing it behind the Altar. Her Sacrifice were a small Hog, or a Lamb: the Queen performed these Rites, that is, the Wife of the Priest of the Sacrifices, who was called King; because at the time when Kings govern'd Rome, they performed these Ceremonies themfelves; but when they were expell'd, it was given to the Priest that officiated, who was subject to the Pontifex or High priest; least the Name should seem to found too much of Absolute Power. Juno had feveral Names, upon account of her prefiding over Marriages, and punishing Strumpets; fuch as Domiduca, Unxia, Cinxia, and Gamelia, and Zugia by the Greeks, and invoked in Marriages by them.

The Antients called her Calendaris, because she was worship'd and invok'd in all the Calends. Juno Novella was worship'd by the Pontifices in the Calends of February; also Februara, because her facred Rites were celebrated in that Month. Dion. Hal. lib. 2. gives us an account of Juno Quiritia, and the Tables fet for her in all Courts. For the Temple of Juno Ardia, to renowned for Pictures; and the Altar of Juno Lamia, where the Ashes were never moved the the strongest Wind blows on them, see Pliny. Authors give us an account of other Temples dedicated to her. She was called Populonia Juno, from the frequent Addresses the People made unto her: Opigenia and Fluonia, by Women over whom she presided, but especially Women in Trayail, before and after they were deliver'd.

her

le T

la

pl

1 di

Tl

fo

174

its

an te

G

APOLLO.

Cleare de Natura Deorum, tells us, there were four Apollo's: The most Antient, according to Vossius, was Jubal, the Father of the Canaanites, a Kinsman of Tubal-Cain's; unless (as I rather incline to believe) he liv'd before him. He was a most excellent Songster, and had an incomparable Voice. Timogenes says, that Musick was the most Antient of all Studies.

The other Apollo's had relation to some Deities, especially, the Sun; but whether Jubal acquir'd this Honour, is uncertain. He that was the Brother of Osiru, and accompanied him in his Wars, is very Antient amongst the Apollo's, and Recorded by Diod. Siculus. Also Apollo Delius the Brother of Diana, Son of Jupiter and Latona, who was Wordhipped with Jupiter, as Macrobius has it; and had Sacred Rites performed to him in Delos, every fifth Yea, from whence he was called Deliacus, because he delivered Oracles there all the Summer Season; his Priests giving out, that he was elsewhere in the Winter; but the reason of that was, because they would have found it very difficult to Forge their Fictions so warily for a whole Year together, that those those that came to desire Answers, should not discover the Cheat, and thought it fafe to vent their Lies only for one half Year together. He was called Apollo Delphicus, from Delphes, where he had a Temple celebrated for the Oracles deliver'd there. Livy calls this Place, the common Oracle of Mankind, and Navel of the whole World. The Scythians also had their Apollo Hyperborens, so called from them; for the intricate Altar of Apollo Genitor. which was efteem'd one of the feven Wonders of the World, consult Plutarch de Solertia Animat. Callimachus, Ovid, and others. The Greeks and Romans had Apollo Delius in particular Veneration, as the God of Musick, the Inventer of Physick, and called Jaculator, Sagittarius, Pythius and Vates, or the God of Prophecy. His Sirnames amongst the Greeks were, Agricus, Akersocomes, Krysocomes, Loxias, Lykius, Nomins, Thyrains. Amongst the Romans, Califfex, Medieus, Capitolinus, (which was brought from the Thracian Bosphorus to Rome) and Palatinus, who is also called Actiacus, Novalis and Parcetonius.

Augustus built a Temple for this Apollo, on Mount Palatine, after he had vanquish'd Anthony and Cleopatra, Adorn'd it with Statues of Silver and Gold; its Structure was most Magnificent, surnisht with an Excellent Greek and Latin Library; and Authors tell us, that its Treasure grew immense with the Gists and Presents that were made him. The Lawyers met there to determine nice and doubtful Controversies; you have a Description of this Temple in Propertius. This Apollo Delphicus was most Eminently Celebrated, Pliny lib. 34. 52.

He is also called, Choragus, and Captain of the Muses; according to the Diversity of Representing him by his Images and Statues, whereof the Spartisms had one with four Ears, and as many Hands;

he came to have leveral Sirnames; as Sandalarius, Sofianus, Tortor, Thuscanius and Diadematus. There are a great many more in Antient Inscriptions, as alfo many Temples built for him. Porphyrius hath collected many of the Mystical Sirnames of Apollo. and their fabulous Interpretations, in his Book entituled the Sun, out of which Servius hath borrowed fomething.

set!

Amongst four Footed Beasts, the Wolf being like Time most voracious; amongst Infects, the Grassbooper; amongst Birds, the Swan, Crow, Cock and Hawk, were facred to him. But the Egyptians by the Hawk, understood Ofire, who is the Sun with them; they likewife paid Divine Honours to the Hawk, because in Antient times he brought their Priests at Thebes (which is the chief City in Egypt) a Book written in Red Letters, from some unknown and remote Regions of the World, which contain all their facred Rites; and therefore, those amongst them that write of Religious Matters wear a Red Cap, with an Hawk's Wing on it. But all that are conversant with History, know these Fictions were usher'd into the World by their Priests, to gain the greater Credit and Authority to their Laws, Rites, and Ceremonies.

The Laurel amongst Trees, was facred to Apollo and People Predicted things to come by it; for if, when it was thrown on the Coals, it made a great noise; the Antients esteem'd it an happy Presage, but if very little, or none at all, that portended Evil. He that bound Laurel about his Temples when he went to Sleep, should fee the thing in his Dream; he desir'd to know the Truth of. Hesiod says, The Laurel promotes Enthusiastick Notions. The Laurel was not only the Poets, but the Triumphers Enfign alfo, which the Roman Emperours deposited in Jupiter O. M.

O. M. his Lap, acknowledging they received their Victory from him.

The Emperour Julian says, the Palm was sacred to the Sun, or Apollo, tho Libanius will have it proceed from him; but after an unaccountable manner.

DIANA.

Cleero also, lib. 3. de N. D. says, there were three Diana's formerly; the most Renown'd, was the Mother of the winged Cupid, the Daughter of Jupiter and Latona, and Sister of Apollo, as the Moon was Sister to the Sun. We have handled the Erymology before, and can by no means approve of her being called Diana from Deviana, wandring in the Woods, or in Heaven it self.

She is Represented as the most Severe and Chast amongst all the Gods and Goddesses, out of an aversion to Pleasure, rather than Mankind; she would not be Aton'd, but by Humane Victims, tho' she did admit of an Hind in the room of Iphigenia, but on condition that she should be her Priestess for the future. Men were generally Sacrificed to Diana, especially in Tauris, whose Inhabitants Sacrificed all Strangers to her, but Grecians more particularly. Paulanias in his Achaica, fays, that the Patra Sacrificed the most beautiful Boy, and a young Virgin every Year to Diana. Iphigenia, who would not Sacrifice her Brother Orestes, when he was taken a Stranger there; hid the Image of this Goddes in a bundle of Sticks, and carried it to Aritia, a Town not far distant from Rome, where they continued that Cuftom of Sacrificing Strangers for fome time; but in a little while, this Barbarity became very displeasing to the Romans, altho' Servants only were offer'd up, that they fent elle.

her to the Lacedemonians, where the Youth only were Whipt, and her Altars sprinkled with their Afterwards, Harts and Hinds only were facrificed to Diana, and in all her Temples their Horns were hung up. Hence the Poets feign her Chariot to be drawn by Yok'd Deer, more particularly Claudian: I have infifted the longer upon this, to shew what Cruel and Impious Sacrifices the Priests Invented, under the specious Name of Religion; whose great Endeavour was to perswade Mortals, that some Deities would not be render'd propitious, but by Humane Blood only; and that those who were offer'd up, were fufficiently Honour'd, having the Care of their whole Species committed to their Charge. Diana also presided over Women in Travel, and they Confecrated their Cloths to her, and from thence she is called Chitone. Not only Deer, but Barren Cows were offer'd in Sacrifice to Diana; her Statue being carried at that time on a Barren Cow, fometimes on a White one, sometimes on a Black.

Her Statue was Tall and Large, and Cloths down to her Ankles: her Afpect Juvenile, and Virginlike, carrying a Lighted Torch in her Right Hand, a Bow in her Left, and a Quiver of Arrows hanging over her Shoulder. Some describe it otherwise; the was called the Pleasant Virgin and Dyctinna; and by Orpheus, Cynegetis, and Callimachus, Theretira, prefiding over Hunting; she was esteem'd a great Huntrels her felf, and therefore all Groves and Forests were facred to her.

She was called Bubaft's by the Egyptians, from a Famous City of that Name; and her facred Rites were called Bubasta, she had a Temple in Crete, and another built on Mount Aventine at Rome, as alfo alfo ples was and fom the perio leav

Ch

Fupin Mine mun of th Lette taugh Wor befor offer he w fore i on th Privy lide o

the

Cross 1 Which prefer he S

Temp Temp eing Tro

also at Caliola and Subura. Her most Antient Temples were in Spain and Aulis; but the most Famous was that at Ephesus, much mention'd by Authors, and in the Atts of the Apostles. I might here speak something of the Sun and Moon, who are said to be the Children of Rhea, or the Great Mother, and Hyperion, according to Diod. Siculus lib. 4. but I shall leave it to others.

MERCURT.

Here were five Mercuries, according to Cicero, M. D. lib. 2. The most Famous was the Son of Jupiter and Maja. The Antients joyn'd him and Minerva together, not in Wedlock, but by a Com-munity of Studies: He was esteem'd the Messenger of the Gods, and is reported to be the Inventer of Letters, Musick, Wrestling, and Geometry, and that he worshipped him by the Name of Anuba, as we said before: He was held in great Veneration amongst the Antient Germans, who esteem'd it lawful to offer Humane Sacrifices to him on certain Days; he was called Deus Communis, the common God; wherefore it was Customary when they found any thing on the way, to fay something to the Common God, as Privy to what was found, he being thought to preide over the Ways; they erected him Statues in the Gross Ways of the Cities, and where three Ways met, which the Antients called Herma; I pass by his Rerefentation as Univerfally known. Pliny mentions he Statues of Mercury in Ethiopia. He had two Temples, as many Chapels, fome Altars, and a Temple at Rome; he is called Cyllenius and Camillus, eing the Servant of the Gods, and Subterraneous, Trophonist 03 3, 11

P

Minerva

Cl

and

cle He

Ou

her

on is t

Me

fign

tha

wit

Was

whi

Her

home

A

out

affiff

Flov

in ( whe

ratio

and

A

both

The

tants tion

a Bla

and

him,

Patricing!

MINERVA

Chero lib. 3. de Natur. Deorum, mentions five Minerva's; but the most Remarkable is, she that is reported to proceed out of Jupiter's Head: She was the Goddess of Prudence and War; and according to some Invented Armed Dances, she discover'd the Making of Cloth, and Dying of Wool, and many other things; all Atisicers made their Supplications unto her, from whence she was called the Goddess of Arts, but in Conjunction with Mercury; so that their Altars and Statues were in common to both, and therefore called Hermathena.

Her most Antient Temple was built in the Tower of Orvinius; he mentions the Temple of Minerva Assessing, but it was Burnt down, as also that of Minerva at Palleni, amongst the Tageates, and in Sigaum, and her Oracles in Egypt, and speaks of many other Temples Dedicated to her in a great many places; she had one in Landum, an Island belonging to the Rhodians; another in Elis, and had a Shrine in the Capitol. At Rome there were Temples to Minerva, Medica, Flaviana, Chalcidina, and Catuliana. In the Temple of Minerva, Dedicated by Pompey the Great; were kept the Abstracts of all that was done by him in the East.

She was also called Pallas, her Image was that Famous Palladium which was not only said to fall down from Heaven, but to Brandish its Lance, and Move its Eyes, but none were admitted to see it, besides the Vestal Virgins, to whose Care the Custody of it was committed: She had a very Antient Temple on Mount Aventine. Cicero Worshipped Minerva Custos, privately in his own House, but when he went into Exile, he brought it to the Capitol, and

t

1,

1-

li-

m, er

S;

he

he

UA,

he

at;

im

hat

fall

and

e it,

ody

em-

mer-

hen

itol,

and

and Dedicated it. Her Sacrifices were all very clean, as White Lambs, White Bulls, and a Wild Heifer, with Gilded Horns. Amongst the Birds, the Owl was facred to her; so that you shall rarely see her Image on any Medal, but there is an Owl sitting on her Helmet, and an Inscription Athene, which is the Name the Poets called her by; she carried a Medusa's Head on her Shield, or Breast-Plate, to signific Victory. So Pausanias in his Atticks, writes, that the Athenians Engrav'd Victory on their Breasts, with Medusa's Head. Every Boy knows who Medusa's was. The Olive-Tree was facred to Minerva, of which she is said to be the Inventres; whence Herod, in Terpsich, writes; that, For a long time; hone bad any Olives but the Athenians.

MARS.

As Minerva is reported to be Born without a Mother, so Mars without a Father; for, Juno envying Jupiter, that he had a Daughter without her, had a great desire to have a Son without his allistance; to which purpose, she made use of some Flowers which Flora had shewn her, as we have it in Ovid. Juno was Deliver'd of him in Thrace, whereupon the Inhabitants have him in great Venetation. Some mention another Mars by Jupiter, and Enro.

Acinacis was the true Representation of Mars, both with the Thracians and Scythians; Herod, lib. 7. The Northern People swore by him. The Inhabitants of Arabia Petrica, who had an equal Veneration for him, Represented him thus; they squared a Black Stone sour Foot high, and two Foot broad, and no Figure express don it; others describe him, (that he may appear Arm'd and Terrible) hold

PI

CI

tha

oth

int

pho

-6

QB

Cal

Vei

to t whi

all dear

fam

1 not

Columple,

ple

Land

and and

Fron

fons

Cam

these politi

Affifi Anti

Bellon

Arm

Hand

1110 ing a Spear and Flail in his Hand, and his Chariot drawn by two Horses, whereof one is called Terror, and the other Fear, and Fame goes every where before them sounding her Trumpet. The Romans believed that Romalus was begot by Mars (but more probably by his Priest) and therefore they paid great Veneration to him.

The most Antient of all his Temples, was in the Campus Martins, or Mars his Field, from whence the Place had its Name; there also the Comitia Centuriata met, and the Army was Mustered, as Dion, Hal. fays, who also speaks of a very Antient Temple of Mars in the City Suna, and of an Oracle of his in Tiora : I have spoken before of Mars's Orack in Egypt. There was a Temple of Mars in the Cir. cus Flaminius, and another in the Capitol. The largest Temple was Built by Augustus, and Dedicated to Mars Ultor, the Magnificence whereof is celebrated by Ovid in his Fasti. The second Temple to Mars Ulter (or rather) Bis Ulter; Augustus erested in the Capitol, for a Victory he obtained over the Parthians, where their Enfigns were hung up. A very large and pompous Temple was erected to Mars Gradious without the City, in the Appian way, who P. Victor calls Mars Extramuraneus, or without the Walls.

BELLONA.

monthers mother Mars by fusiter

A Fter Mars, Bellona his Sifter, Wife, or both, Succeeds very properly; she had a Temple in the Circus Flaminius, in which the Senate gave Audience to the Ambassadours of those Foreign Nations, that the Romans would not admit into the City. Her Priests were called Bellonaris as Tertullian has it; They slash'd and cut themselves with Knives, that that they might make their Deity Propitious, by no other Blood but their own, upon which they fell into a strange fort of Rage and Fury, and then Prophesied. Statius says, she drove Mari's Chariot,

With bloody Hands his Steeds

e

9

36

10

7-

11,

n-

of cle

irhe

:2-

ce-

ple

re-

ver

up.

ted

nian

10

bill

oth,

nple

gave eign

the

illian ives,

that

Cafar writes, that the Cappadocians had her in such Veneration, that her Priests were next in Honour to the King. Some say, she is the same as Minerva, which is a more probable Opinion than that of Apuleius, who makes Diana, Juno, Venus, and Bellona all one, or of a certain Learned Man, who endeavours to make the Moon and Bellona to be the same.

There were fome Pillars before Bellona's Shrine not very Large, which the Romans called, Bellica Columna; for when they made War with any People, after they had opened the Gates of the Temple of Janus, one of the Confuls went and threw a Lance towards that Part where the Enemy was a and from that time they esteem'd War Declar'd; and at the same time, they sent a Herald to the Frontiers of the Enemy, who declaring the Reasons for the War, threw his Lance towards their Camp, in a ceremonious Form. The Heathens of these latter Ages, esteem'd Pausus a Deity, quite opposite to Bellona, and used to implore his Aid and Affiliance when they had fuffer'd by War. The Antients no where mention Paulus, as I know of g Bellona was represented with her Hair spread abroad, Arm'd with a Torch, carrying a Scickle in one hand, and a Shield in the other.

Victoria.

VICIORIA.

Theory was brought up with Minerva, and made a Goddess at the same time with her. The Romans paid great Devotion to her, and Represented her thus; a Virgin with Wings Flying, offering a Crown or Palm; her Image was carried in Pomp in the Circus, the had an Altar always in the Senate-House, fuch as was capable of being removed into any Place where the Senate was, as Dempfter fays, She had three Temples at Rome, two Chapels and a Grove (as almost all the other Gods) and an Altar. The most Antient of her Temples, was in Mount Aventine, (being most convenient to pitch Tents in) she had other Temples and Chapels in Rome alfo, Cicero lib. 1. de Divin. tells us, that Victory at Capua would sweat, as Apollo did at Cuma, as the prefage of fome impending Evil. Lan overes ino Cases of the Tents words the NEMESIS.

Then the Romans went to War, they Sacrificed to Namesis, who was the Daughter of Justice, and Publish'd a reward for Gladiators, as Pomponius Latus tells us. There was another Namesis, the Power of Fortune; she was Worshipped in the Capitol, P. Victor says, she had a Temple in the City. So much for the Gods that were esteem'd to preside over War with Mars, or were Auxiliary to him.

and with a Torch, or ying a Scientian one a Spield in the enforcement which a Printerias

Ventis,

1

F

fi

P

fi

0 tl

e

H

a te

S

0

R

fh V

ju

VENUS.

Cleero Lib. 3. de N. D. fays, there were formerly four Venus's; but her Name is Modern; for Varro in Macrobius fays, that in the time of the Kings of Rome, it neither was a Greek nor Latin word. I have given you the thoughts of the Learned Selden, concerning it before.

-

0

S,

2

r. it

ts

310

at bs

4-

11-

fis,

he

y.

e-

03

3554

The Antients esteem'd her the Goddess of Generation, Pleasure, and external Beauty, so that she could either bestow, or take it away according as she thought sit. To this purpose Plutarch in his Sympos. gives you her History, or rather Fable, and therefore deduces her from the Sea, that he might shew the Generative Power of Salt, and many other things, for which consult that Author. The Platonists had two Venus's, the one Urania or Celestial, to Represent Divine Love, the other Terrestial, and afterwards made a Goddes.

Some Mythologists will have Venus, Juno, the Moon, Proserpine, Diana, and some other Goddesses to be the fame, and that the diversity of Names, doth only exhibit to us their different Virtues; but I have treated of these Mystical Interpretations before, as far as we have any Light from Authors. Venus had a Statue in Paphos, which did not Represent any Humany Figure, but was a Conoide; the Bafe, Broad, and Round, and gradually decreasing till it terminated in a Point at the Top; many of the Antient Statues were after the same manner, as well as this of Venus, for they were not always, or every where Represented by a Humane Form. In other Places the is discrib'd by the Figure of a Beautiful young Virgin, Naked, standing in a Shell, as if she had just rose out of the Sea. Augustus dedicated Venus rifing out of the Sea; (as Apelles had Painted her) 111 in the Temple of Julius Cafar, which was called Rising out again. Venus was also called the Marine, to whom a certain Island was Consecrated, and had

m

m

[e]

21

Ta

m

OV

Fu

W

tin al

ty

le

79 ta

to

at Vi

R

A. fe

P

CI

her Temple in it.

The most Antient Temple, according to Herodo. tus, was that of Venus Urania, built in Ascalon a City of Palestine, which the Scythians Demolish'd, as was faid before: He also says, that the Venus Cypria was made out of this, and the Phenicians that came from that Part of Syria, built her a Temple at Cythera. The Goddeß being enrag'd at the Demolishing her Temple, sent a Distemper amongst their Women, but he doth not tell us what it was, mor indeed is it very material to know. I have formerly mention'd her being called Mylitta by the Affyrians, Alitta by the Arabians, and Metra by the Persians, The same Author speaks of a Temple of Venus amongst the Aterbechi, and a Chapel of Venus Hospes, in the Temple of Proteus; also Venus Urania, whom the Scythians Worship'd by the Name of Artempasa. The first things Aneas and his Trojans set about when they Arriv'd in Italy, was building a Temple to Venus, Dion. Hal. lib. 4. She had a Temple amongst the Zacynthi, and near Anchifes-Bridge as it was then called. The Leucadians and Actionses had Temples facred to her.

It is certain that the worshipping of Venus Urania, was the most Antient; but whether she denoted Celestial Love, or the Power of Celestial Fortune, the Queen of Heaven, or the Star called by her Name, remains yet undecided. This Venus was not Worshipped by Lew'd Women only, but by the most Chast Virgins, that she might bestow Gracefulness and Beauty upon them, and render them agreeable and acceptable to all. Widows also made their Supplications to her, that their second Marriage might be Prosperous; so that the Festivals of Venus were most Religiously observed by all forts of Women.

Her Sir-names were Acidalia (Servius Aneid. 1.) either because she creates Cares, or from a Fountain of that Name, in which the Graces bath themselves, who are facred to her; she is called Cluacina, a Cluere, which Antiently signified to Fight. Titus Tatius the King, built her a Temple, and Onuphrius makes mention of her Temples and Chapels.

She was called Libitina (as we faid before) because the Heathens believed the same Goddes presided over our Births and Deaths. All necessaries for a Funeral were Sold in her Temples; young Girls, when they come to Womens Estates, Dedicated Babies, the Indications of their Age, to Venus Libitina. She is called Alma Venus, that is Holy and Fair : also Verticordia, turning Womens Hearts to Chaftity, Ovid. lib. 4. Harmonia the Wife of Cadmus called her Antistrophia, because she diverts Men from wicked actions, Ill thoughts, and base desires. Etycina was another of her Names, from the Mountain Eryce, in Sicily, where Aneas built a Temple for his Mother, and Q. Fabius Maximus, dedicated one to her in his Dictatorship. Venus Erycina, had another at the Hill-Gate; there was a Temple in the Via Sacra, or Holy Way of Venus Romana's or Venus Rome's Confort, on which occasion Prudentius says, Incense is burnt to Conjunct Deities.

Marcellinus mentions this Temple as particularly deferving Admiration. The Elians Worshipped Venus Popularis. There was also Venus Calva or Bald; because, when the Gauls Besieged Rome, the Women cut off their Hair to make Ropes to manage their Machines Machines with ; and from thenceforward a Temple was dedicated to Venus the Bald. The Cyprians had a Statue of Venus Barbata, or Bearded, as Alex. Neapolit. informs us. Suidas fays, Venus was fometimes Reprefented with a Beard and Comb, because formerly a most contagious Itch raged amongst the Roman Women, which made all their Hair fall off, fo that they had no need of a Comb; wherefore the Women made Vows unto her, and she was prevail'd upon, and their Hair grew again; upon which they fet up an Image of her, with a Comb and Beard, that the Goddeß, who presided over all acts of Generation. should be Represented, both Male and Female; and therefore the upper part of her Body to her Girdle feem'd Male, and the lower Female; almost all other Deities participated of both Sexes, that they might not feem to be deficient or useless in any particular; which, according to the Doctrine of the Egyptians, was appropriated to the Elements. The Lacedemonians had a Temple dedicated to Venus Armata, the Original of which Name you'll find in Lactantius, of whom Aufonius fays, Pallas did once in Armour Venus see, Let Paris judge whose Victor now, says she, Rash Wretch (says Venus) to Attack me now, When I Stark-Naked vanquish'd you, you know.

Pompey dedicated a Temple to Venus Victrix, or the Conquerour, in his fecond Consulship; the Greeks called her Nicophora, see Pausan. On some of the Coins of Faustina, Venus is Represented holding out Victory with her Right Hand, and this Inscription, Veneri Victrici. Posthumus Tubertus, the first that Triumphed, because he had gain'd the Victory easily, and without Blood-shed, enter'd the City, Crown'd with

a

-

it

n

1,

P

e

r-11

y

-

ie

7-

in

he

he

п,

ri-

ly,

n'd ith with the Myrile of Venus Victrix. Pliny lib. 15. cap. 29. Julius Cæsar built a Temple to Venus Genetrix, after the Fight of Pharsalia, and dedicated the Plunder to her; and amongst other things, a Breast-Piece of British Pearls. Augustus set up a Brass Statue in this Temple to Cæsar Divus, and a Blazing-Star shining over his Head, like that which appear dafter his Death. See Dionysius, lib. 43. Appianus de Bello Civili, lib. 2. Venus Placida had a Chapel, and Suetonius speaks of Venus Capitolina. The Antients Consecrated the Myrile and Rose-Tree to Venus Virg. Eclog. 7.

The Myrtle to Fair Venus.

Some held that the Myrtle had a Virtue to procure and continue Love. From the Electra of Euripides, it appears the Greeks put small Branches of Myrtle on their Funeral Piles. Some Marble Monuments also inform us, that it was usual to place Crowns of Myrtle on the Heads of the Deceas'd, perhaps because Venus Libitina took Care of the Dead. Venus was Antiently called Myrtia, or Myrtea, from the Myrtle. The Rose, which was dedicated to Venus, hath a great Analogy to External Beauty; for as nothing is more grateful and fragrant, so nothing less permanent. Poets tell us of a White Rose Dy'd Purple with Venus's Blood. After Venus follows Cupid, the Graces and Adons.

CUPID.

Cleero lib. 2. de N. D. enumerates three Cupids. The first was Son of Mercury and Diana. The second and Principal, of Mercury and Venus. And the third (called Anteres) of Mars and Venus. It is not to my purpose to mention what the Poets say in Praise of their Cupid; nor shall I enlarge upon that Divine or Celestial Love which the Platonick Philosophers have in such Veneration, in regard Mars. Ficinus hath faid very much on this Argument : some amongst the Antients were of Opinion, that as Cupid did favour and affift Love, fo Anteres cross'd and oppos'd it. But others, of which Number is Porphyrius, held Anteros to be mutual Love, and fays, When Cupid was an Infant, and did not grow at all, Venus consulted the Goddes's Themis; who answer'd ber, that Anteros was necessary for Cupid, that they might take their turns, and be mutually affifting to each other: Upon this Anteros was got, and when he was just Born, Cupid began to grow, and open his Wings; and when Anteros was with him, always grew in Seature and Beauty, but in his absence, pined and wasted away, the meaning of this is very evident.

Philostratus mentions a great many Cupids or Loves; the Sons of the Nymphs, Apuleius Represents them as very fair Boys, descending from Heaven, or rising out of the Sea: Orpheus says, there are two Gates to Heaven, one thro' which Souls Descend here below, and the other thro' which they Ascend. I omit to speak of the ways of representing him, as commonly known; tho the Antients had several kinds of Images for him as well as his Mother Venus. They mention no other Temples of his but what were Founded in Hearts.

The GRACES.

A Ccording to some, they were the Daughters of Bacchus and Venus, others of Jupiter and and Erymone, others of Juno, and there are others who give another fabulous account of their Pedigree Chrysippus said, the Graces were somewhat younger and more beautiful than the Hours; and therefore esteem'd them the Companions of Venus. Their Office was to preferve mutual Friendship amonest Men, and make them grateful for Benefits receiv'd. Pausanias says, the Lacedemonians had but two Graces, but the Athenians three. Hefiod gives us their Names ; Eupbrosyne, which fignifies Cheerfulnels; Aglaia, Majesty and Gracefulness; Thalia, Gay and Flourishing; to these Homer adds a fourth. called Pasithea, and that one of the Graces was Wife to Vulcan. Seneca lib. 1. Benef. mentions but three Graces, and gives a Description of their Images. Atheneus tells us of a Temple dedicated to the Hours, in which was an Altar to Bacchus. Alex. Neapol. from Aristotle says, the Temple of the Graces was built in the middle of the Street, to make Men every where mindful of Benefits receiv'd. The Greeks called them Charites. Servius says, of them they were represented Naked, that they might not appear to have any deceit, joyn'd together, because they were inseparable in their own Nature. The Reason why they are Painted, one looking from us, and the other two towards us; is, because the Favours we bestow, generally return double stocker, or that laber, who undertook the extra and with the state of the state

Servius says, Adonis was Venus's Servant, and that the Antients gave all the Gods affistants of an inferiour Power and Authority; as Adonis to Venus, Virbia to Diana, &c. and so much for Venus and her attendants.

Bacchus

BACCHUS.

the Craves were forcular the Companions of Kows. Mero lib. 2. de N. D. enumerates five Bacchus's. or Dionysti. The first was Son of Jupiter by Proferpine; the fecond of Nilus, who is faid to have killed Nifus; the third Begot by a Goat, who was King of Afia, and had the Sabbazia instituted to him the fourth of Jupiter and the Moon, to whom the facred Rites of Orpheus were paid; the fifth of Nifus and Thione, from whence came the Trieterides, The Poets report him the Son of Jupiter and Semele, and fo do Diod. Sicul. and Enfebius. The word Dionyfius is faid to be Compounded of Jupiter and Nysa; but who that Nyfa was, is very uncertain, for there were feveral of that Name; but Died. Sicul. lib. 4. places this between Phanicia and Egypt, in whose Cave the Muses brought up Bacchus. He was not only the Inventer of Wine and Vineyards, but of a drink made of Barley, which some call Zithum. In his Travels over the World; he had not only an Army of Men, but of Women also, along with him, inflicting Punishments on Criminals.

Wolfius is of Opinion, that the most Antient Bacchus was Noah, but sometimes he is Osiris, sometimes Bacchus, or the Liber, who undertook the Expedition into the Indies; or to speak more justly, Arabia, which is no wonder it was called India; for the Antients called all the Country beyond the Mediterranean, India; whether it were within or beyond Ganges. This Arabian Bacchus was the same as Moses, as our Countryman Sandford and Vossus after him affort.

I will cite a few things out, of both the said Authors, to clear this Point. We call that Famous Law-giver by the Name of Moses; Orphens calls Li-

her

(

fi

h

V

th

H

th

15 m

M

th

M

ot

it

in

Pi

lib

br

N

74

W

Pl

ile

ite

vii

Se

W

te

Wi

for

M

ber or Milen, nordoth it fignifie any thing, that Milen fignifies a Proclaim'd Queen; for Dionyfins, or Liber. had both Sexes. Alex. Polybift. fays, there was a Woman whose Name was Mosa, that gave the Fews their Laws. The Antients sometimes put Female Habit on Bacchus, as may be feen in Philostratus, on the Image of Ariadne; but Eusebius out of Porphyrius. is of Opinion that Bacchus was Habited like a Woman, and Horn'd; to express the two-fold Virtue. Male and Female, that is in Plants, for producing of their Fruits; Bacchus is called Bimater, having two Mothers; and Pharaob's Daughter was effeem'd another Mother to Mofes, Exed. 2. 10. Act. 7. where it is faid, that Moses was instructed in all the Learning and Wisdom of the Egyptians. Diod. Sic. lib. 5. Praises the wonderful Beauty of Bacchus, and Fosephas lib. 4. cap. 5. fays the same of Moses. Liber was brought up in Nysa, a Mountain in Arabia; and Nyssus in the Alexandrian Chronicle, is Sinab in Atabia, where Moses received his Law; and to which, after forty Years exile in Egypt, he return'd. Plutarch de Isid. and Oser. speaks of Liber's Exile, and so does Theodoret. Moses brings the Ifraelites out of Egypt after forty Years Captivity: Nonnius 20. Dionysiac. fays, that Liber fled into the Red-Sea, in these words,

With weary steps, this glorious God doth flee, Unto the yellow Banks of the Red-Sea.

n

45

25

i-a,

n-

a-

es,

m

u-

us

Li-

ber

When Moses had pass'd this Sea, he fought many Battels with the Arabians and the Neighbouring Princes. Liber too (as Diodorus cites out of Antimirus) came with his Army into Arabia, which as we said before, consisted not only of Men, but Women also. Moses had all the People of Israel with him, which

con-

confisted of Men, Women and Children. Orpheus calls Dionyfius or Liber, Thesmophoron: Moses was the Fewish Legislator, to whom Orpheus attributes Diplaca The mon, because of the two Tables of the Decalogue. Liber or Dionysius in his Hymns, is called Taurometopus, with a Bulls Fore-bead, Horned Bull-like, and Corniger, Now the Rays that shin'd from the Face of Moles. representing the Sun-Beams, the vulgar Translation of the Bible, renders that place, Exod. 24. 29. The Face of Moses was Horned; the Painters have always Drawn him with two Horns. Mofes in the Wilderness, stroke the Rock with his Rod, and Water gush'd out, this was Represented in the Orgii of Liber; so Euripides in Bacch. Taking a Rod, he stroke a Rock, and a dewy moisture of Water issued out. God Tent fiery Serpents amongst the Israelites, which destroyed many of them; but upon their Repentance, Moses, by the Command God, erected a Brazen Serpent, and whosoever look'd upon it was Healed. The Worshippers of Bacchus, ty'd Serpents about their Heads, as may be feen in Euripides his Bacchus, Catullus, Clemens Alexandr. Adm. ad Gentes, and Arnobius, lib. 5. Moses had a most faithful Companion, called Caleb, in Sacred Writ. Keleb in Hebrew is a Dog, and Liber had a Dog for his Affociate, who was afterwards advanc'd to Heaven. Nonnius 16. Dionys. introduces him, speaking thus to his Dog, I will gratefully reward thee for all thy pains and toil; I will make thee a Citizen of Heaven, next to Syrius; glorious, with many shining Stars, near the former Dog, that thou mayst ripen the Grape, the Branches receiving Plenty and Splendour from thee. Moses brought the People to a Land, flowing with Milk and Honey: So in the Bacch. of Euripides, The Earth flows with Milk, and Wine, and the Nectar of Bees (or Honey) and the smoke like that of Libanus. I have said enough to fuff

Ch

enc

are light Lyc lays

See made fo, Back Scal

Alta inferian ciall

Bed! him he

The

enough on this subject, for the Fictions of the Greeks are but a weak Authority, or what else is alluded to by others, whose Veracity we have Reason to suspect: For the difference between the Egyptian Backbus, whom some call Osiris; and the Theban, whose sacred Rites were much like those in Egypt, see Vossims de Idolol. Bacchus comes from a Greek word, signifying to Howl. His Sir-names were facchus Lycaus, Lenaus, Lienotes, of these Auson. Epig. 29. says, Ogygia does me Bacchus call;

In Egypt I Ofiris am;
And with the Mysta Phanaces,
The Indians Dionysius; Liber in Holy Rome's my Name; Adonis in Arabia;
Pantheus by th' Lucanians.

See also Ovid. Metam. lib. 4. tho there is no mention made of Bacchus Eleutherius, who some say, was called so, because he made the Citizens of Bactia free. Bacchus has other Sir-names, but I pass them by. Scaliger observes that Bacchus and Proserpine had an Altar in Common, and he is reckon'd amongst the infernal Gods by Artemidorus. The Antient Historians, St. Augustine de Civ. Dei, and the Poets, especially Catullus, have given a large account of those Bedlam Rites that were perform'd in Honour of him, called the Bacchanalia; amongst other things he says,

The Orgia which the Wicked bear in vain.

t

3

d

h

The Scythians would not admit the Bacchanalia amongst them, as Herod. says, lib. 4. thinking it very ridieu-

-upibit

ridiculous, that there should be any God that would make Men run Mad. They were in some measure abolish'd in Italy also, and in some measure retain'd, for Dion. Hal. fays, there were fome things generous at the Festivals of Bacchus, of which I should speak, but the Extravagance and Obfcenity of the Matter will not permit me; upon which account they antiently were celebrated without the City. Herod. lib. 1. he also speaks of a Shrine of Bacchus, full of Assyrian Characters, and a Temple of his at Samos, Plin. Nat. Hift. lib. 8. cap. 26. the Temple of Bacchus at Rome, was in the second Division. A Chapel of Liber Pater in the fixth. He is Represented like a Boy, at Man's Estate, and in old Age. The Panther was always placed near, as a Beaft facred to him, as also the As and Tyger, Pliny lib. 24. says, He was esteem'd the Commander of the Muses as well as Apollo, and the Poets were Crown'd with Ivy as well as Bays. The Ivy, which in Greek is Kiffos from Kiffan, which fignifies to Lust after any thing, was facred to Bacchus.

The Antients fay, that Bacebus was the first that rode in Triumph on an Elephant. Cartarius fays, amongst the Birds, the Magpye was facred to him, because it was lawful for any Person to asperse him that Triumphed with whatever he could object against him, which I much doubt of a for the Chattering of that Bird is as applicable to prating Drunkurds, as to those that rail'd against him that Triumphed. Suidas fays, Bacchus and Priapus were the fame, and others, that Bacchus was his Father. shall speak of the Fan of Bacchus when I treat of the Expiation of the Antients; his Companions were the Sileni, Bacchæ, Lenæ, Thyiæ, Mimellones, Naides Satyra, Baffarides, Nympha. 180W 1800 bongh them, as Herod, tays, CHARLE IT ACLA

Ceres

thi

VO

tra

Wa

He

tec

len

Ven

ter

Bre

ref

hav

bec

Iss,

and

ow

nias

lib.

OVE

the

ted

of an amed as ign C E R E S.

CEres, the Daughter of Saturn and Ops, was worshipped both by the Greeks and Romans, of whom Virgil. Georg. 1. says, Ceres first taught us Mortals how to plow; Plenty of Fruit did on the Earth bestow:

And Ovid :

8

is in

T

1d.

of 3,

us of a

25

125

as

25 om

vas

hat

ys,

im,

nim

jea

nat-

run-

Tri-

the

the

ver

ides

eres

To her Benevolence all this we ow.

Ceres, according to some, was called Libera; but this is contradicted by Herod. who says Postbumius vowed a Temple to Ceres, Liber and Core, which is translated here Libera, but according to Cicero, Libera was Proserpine; but certain it is she was not Cerest He also lib. 2. de N. D. says, Our Ancestors confectated Ceres with Liber and Libera, very sacredly and solemnly. Some are of opinion that this Libera was Venus, but I shall adhere to the former, till I see betater reason.

Her Sirnames were, Panda, because she gave us Bread; and Nonnius out of Varro, those who sly for resuge to Ceres had Bread given them. Others will have Panda the Goddess of Peace. She is called Alma, because she feeds us. She was accounted the same as sis, as in Diod. Sicul. lib. 5. The Egyptians say Ceres and Isis are the same, and that she taught them first to sow. The Sacred Rites of Ceres used by the Athermians are much the same with those of sis. And Her. lib. 2. affirms that he and Liber had Dominion over the Infernal Regions; from whence the Fan of the Purgation of the Soul, or Expiation was attributed to Baschus.

The

9731

T

CT

N

tia

Cr

ne

fci

nin

int

far

tio

do

Le

and

COI

pai

Cer

tair

Ped

lon

put it v

pie

Ch

in t hel

Car

The same Author speaks of the Temple and Shrines of Ceres, and she had Temples built in Platea and Eleusa. He also mentions Ceres Atherea, and her Orgia. Ceres Legisera was worshipp'd by the Women, lib. 6. and 8. that the Solemnities of Ceres and Proserpine, were observed by the Athenians every year. Servius upon the 4th. of the Aneids, informs us why she was called Legisera. It's said that Ceres invented the Laws; for her Sacred Rites are called Thesmophoria, that is, the introducing of Laws. This is only a Fiction, because before Ceres invented Sowing Corn, Men ranged up and down the World subject to no Laws, which Barbarity ceas'd after the Distinction of the Propriety of Land, for from thence arose Laws.

The Syracufians facrificed to Ceres and Proserpine her Daughter; tho' after a more modest manner than those of Eleusa, concerning which Athenaus lib. 14. fays, Heraclides writes of antient and establish Customs, and relates that the Syracusians at their Thesmophoria made the representation of Womens Privities with Indian Wheat and Honey, which were called Mulli throughout all Sicily, and carried about in bonour of these Goddesses. Of which Vossius fays, It was an impious Custom, tho' symbolical: for as the Man's Pudenda is carried about at the sacred Rites of Ofiris and Bacchus, to signify the Power of Generation; so in the Syracusian Theimophorii a Female Representation was carried about, to to signify its Passive Principle. Dion Halicarnass. lib. 1. mentions a Temple of Ceres, where abstemious Rites were performed to her by Priestesses, after the Grecian manner, which remain'd the fame to his time; but it was provided by Law, That Women only should affist at the Grecian Sacred Rites of Ceres. The Estates of those that did strike or kill a Tribune, or oppos'd their Authority, were confiscated to Gerer, Dion. Hal. lib. d

4-

nd

0-nd ar.

ny red

io-

rn,

no

on ole

ine

lib.

Cu-

el-

ties ulli

bese Cu-

fig-

iel-

, to

. 1.

ites

cian

but fist

s of os'd

Hal.

lib.

lib. 6. There is a Temple of Ceres in the Circus Maximus, and above the Prisons. She had others also, of whom P. Victor says, That in the Eleusinian Rites, the Priests (who were Women) ran in the night with Torches, and she that was foremost, continually cry'd out, Stand off, stand off, you Impious.

None could be admitted to her, without being initiated, who must make Expiation for whatever Crimes he had committed. We read of Nero, that he never was present at these Ceremonies, being conscious of his own Villainy: but the Emperour Antoninus, as an argument of his Probity, was initiated into the facred Rites of Ceres Eleusina. Her Anniverfaries were called Initia Majora, the Greater Initiations; at which time it was publickly declared, out of some mysterious Letters, what was to be observ'd and done at this Sacred Pomp and Ceremony. Thefe Letters were preferv'd in a certain heap of Stones; and Pausanias says, when the Pheneate took an Oath concerning a matter of great importance, they repaired thither. He also says, That the Image of Cires Cidania was kept there, and the Priest on certain days in the same Representation did chastise the People with Rods in a paternal manner.

There were many other Rites and Customs belonging to her; as that those who were initiated should put on a new clean Shirt, and never put it off till it was quite worn out; and then they preserved the pieces with great care, to make Swathes for their Children. As none knew what was carried about in these pompous Parades of Ceres Eleusina, so it was held impious to enquire. These sacred things were carried in a Chest shut close, and a prosound silence

Q 3

kept,

kept, from whence the young Virgins that carried them, were called Canophoræ. Those that revealed these Mysteries, were admonish in their Dreams (if you can credit it) that their Licentiousness was very displeasing to the Goddesses Ceres and Proserpine. Pausanias says, that intending to treat at large of these sacred Rites, he was deterr'd from it by a Spectre; wherefore he mentions nothing but the Statue of Triptolemus, whom Ceres taught Agriculture; and Brazen Cows adorn'd with Flowers, and their Horns gilt, such as were sacrificed to her. The Arcadians paid the utmost Adoration to Ceres and Proserpine, religiously preserving a Fire constantly burning in their Temples.

Ceres had a very great Statue all of Marble: Proserpine her Daughter was represented cloathed; because the Seeds of all things were covered with some Rind or Bark, nor were they visible as in their Mother Ceres. Hercules was placed before her Feet: there was no Wine used at her Sacrifices, as was at those of the other Gods. These Sacrifices were called her Nuptials. The Sow was her more peculiar Sacrifice, because it destroy'd the Corn. The Antient Heathens were fo ffrictly religious, that they did not believe they had any Power to flay Animals; but the Sow being a hurtful Creature, and did devour or destroy the Harvest they had sown, they did esteem it lawful to facrifice her to the Gods. Ceres was also called Demetrus, Erinnys, Lysia and Melaina; for which Pausanias gives a Reason.

She is represented sitting on a Stone, like a Woman, all but her Head, which is like a Mare with a Mane, Serpents and other wild Beasts playing about her Head, all the rest of her Body covered with a long Garment to the Soles of her Feet; in one Hand she has a Dolphin, and with the other holds

fe

fa

A

In doll

out a Dove, to express the Animals of the Elements about her. I shall not trouble my Reader with the Fable of Ceres being metamorphoz'd into a Mare, and Neptune afterwards into an Horse. There are some who represent her after a more agreeable manner, but so much at present.

desired velocity U L CAN.

There were many Vulcans: Cicero mentions four, amongst whom is he that is said to be Jupiter and Juno's Son, and was held in such Veneration by the Antients. Both Hesiod and Lucian write, or sabulously report that he proceeded from Juno, without the assistance of any God or Man; but this is only to signify, that Fire is sometimes generated by Air alone: that Jupiter threw him headlong into the life of Lemnos, and made him lame, has, according to some, a reference to the Thunderbolts.

ıt

16

5;

ur eres

a;

0-

1 2

out

1 2

ne

lds

out

The Egyptians esteemed him the Inventer of Fire; on which account 'tis my opinion he was Deified, and amongst the Antients signified Fire mystically. For as nothing has been discover'd fince the begining of the World, that is so quick and miraculous in its effect as Fire, fo nothing is more beneficial or advantageous. He was therefore by the Antients accounted some internal Deity, making himfelf visible to us, and an Emblem of the Sun, as was faid before. His most celebrated Temple was at Memphis: we have given an account of his Colofs lying on its back before the Temple, being 75 foot long; as also of the Priests set apart for the celebrating his Mysteries, amongst whom Herod. lib. 2. mentions a King who had a Stone-statue in Vulcan's Temple, holding a Mouse (in commemoration of a Victory obtain'd by the affiftance of this little Ani-Q 4 mal, against Senacharib King of the Arabs and Associans, with this Inscription, Let those that beheld me be pious. Dion. Halicar. lib. 2: tells us of a Temple of Vulcan built by Tatim; and says, that Romulus dedicated four brazen Horses to him; and that Orations were made both before and in his Temple. Pliny lib. 18. says, that the Romans instituted Festivals for him; it is not material to my purpose whether he made the Arms of the Gods, or was Venus's Husband.

VESTA.

Vesta is a Greek Word, and Cicero derives it from Hestia, which in Herod. is Histia; but it may as well be derived from Eschia in the Hebrew, which signifies the Fire of God. Some are of opinion that the Custom of worshipping Fire came from the Jews and remain'd amongst the Gentiles, intermix'd with some other of their New-invented Rites. The Vesta that was esteem'd a Goddess, was the Daughter of Saturn (according to Diod. Sic. and Apollodorus) and the Wife of Janus, as Q. Fabricius Pictor has it.

It is probable, as Castorius observes, the antient Romans began the Sacrifices of other Gods by invoking the Name of Janus and Vesta. Janus first, because he first built a Temple in Italy, and instituted sacred Rites, according to Macrobius. Vesta, because no Sacrifice could be without Fire; therefore the Hearth was dedicated to Vesta, and called Lar, and the Lares were worshipped there. Vestibulum comes from Vesta, the Entrance into the House being sacred to her. She was represented on some antient Coins like a Woman sitting, and carrying a Drum.

It's said that Vesta, in as much as she signified Fire, was worshipped by the Scythians by the Name of Tabeta. Fire was generally worshipped by the Name

f

Ch

of V

cep

faid

Wo

alfo

Pla

of

the

mil

esp

Dei

not

COL

Vell

Po

wh

ftia

bec

lib.

Plin

in ptu

Di

fpe

for

Fe

of Vulcan, both in the East and West; Italy only excepted, who held Vesta in great Veneration, as was said before. Livy says, that the Romans had the Worship of Vesta from the Albani. Sacred Rites were also performed to her at Athens, Delphos and other Places in Greece. Dion. Hal. often mentions a Temple of Vesta built by Numa Pompilius; and says, that the Priests were chosen out of the most Noble Families.

Concerning the Sacred Things kept secret here, especially the Palladium, consult Dion. Hal. and Plutarch; but especially Lud. Vives, on Chap. 2. Aug. de Civit. Dei. Pliny tells us of its being burnt down, which is not strange, in regard (as Plutarch says) it was encompass'd with a continual Fire. Some write, that Vesta signifies only the Earth, or rather an internal Power acting in it. Thus much for Vesta and Vulcan, who were Deities that represented both Pure, Celessial Fire, and the Gross and Elementary.

NEPTUNE.

TEptune by the Antients was the Son of Saturn and Ops or Rhea, and presided over the Sea, because he invented the Art of Navigation. Cicero lib. 3. de N. D. says, Neptune was an intelligent Mind moving over the Sea. Sailors always sacrificed to him. Pling lib. Nat. Hist. speaks of a Temple sacred to him in Caria. Some tell us antient Coins mention Neptune Redux. He had a Temple in Rome in the 9th. Division of the City; another of which P. Victor speaks.

Neptune also taught the Art of Horsmanship: therefore he was called by the Greeks Hippios, Seisichthor, and Poseidon; because he shook the Earth with his Feet, or the Hoof of his Horses. Virg. Aneid. 8.

The Sound of's Hoofs the yielding Fields doth shake.

And in the Georgicks : Want mon and world and Like folid Horn bis Hoofs do found-of T. P. Stille by Marca Poupilies , one Wherefore those concern'd in Horse-races, always fwore by Neptune, that they would use no Tricks. Pausanias says, Hippios was the most known of all Neptune's Names, being receiv'd in all Countries. The Circenses were Sports on Horseback, and facred to Neptune. He was call'd Taxarippus, as Pausania fays, because Horses sometimes seem in a consternation, and are taken with a fudden trembling, especially about the round Altar fet at each fide of the Chariot. Festus reports, that four Horses were constantly facrificed to this Equestrian Neptune every 9th There are two Coins, one Vespasian's and the other Adrian's, which exquisitely exhibite Neptune in both his Capacities: He is represented standing naked, a Mantle hanging down his left Shoulder, holding a Whip with three Lashes in his Right, and a Trident erect in his Left.

Servius says, Amongst the Antients the Gates were sacred to Juno, the Towers to Minerva, and Walls and Foundations to Neptune. The Statue of Neptune and Oceanus were made often so alike, that they could hardly be distinguish'd. The Antients call'd Oceanus the Father of the Gods; but only mystically meant, that original Humidity from which all things receive their Increase.

fpe

Wi

T

M

ni

tie

gr

ſe

A

G

fo

ni

a

th

C

SI

m

0 d

u

1-

6

1-

6 d

g

d

te

id

nd

ld

145

ıt,

ve

R

PORTUMNUS.

Must not here omit Portumnus or Portunus: He was a Deity that presided over the Gates; but I shall not spend time in enquiring, Whether he were the same with Palamon and Melicerta. He formerly had two Temples in Rome, both in the 12th Division of the City.

GENIUS.

THe Antients do not agree what Genius is, or how it came to be reckon'd amongst Animal Deities. Servius in my opinion determines it best, Genius is the Natural God of every Place, Thing and Man. In antient Inscriptions we have, To the Genius of this Place; and lib. I. Arnob. The Genius of Cities. There is an Inscription at Pateoli, To the God the great Genius of the People of Puteoli, and his own Country. Claud. Ep. to Severus, makes Genius also the Preserver of the Realm: And Symmachus to Val. Th. and Arcad. As Souls are allotted to those born, so are the fatal Genii to the People. We find these Words amongst some of Adrian's Inscriptions, Genio P. R. To the Genius of the Romans. There is also the Figure of a Military Man, his Cloaths wrapp'd about him to the middle of his Leg; in his Right Hand a Dish like a facrificing Prieft, and Cornucopia in his Left. To these may be referr'd Nemestinus the God of Groves; Collina and Vallina, Goddeffes of Hills and Vallies. St. Augustin quotes Varro, saying, Every rational Animal had its Genius, and therefore every one had one.

In this Sense the Antients took the Word Genius, when they reckon it amongst the the Animal Deities. Censorinus says, Genius is such an assiduous Observator of us, that it doth not leave us the least moment, but attends us from our Birth to our last Breath. The Antients allow'd every one two; one like our Good Angels, was Man's Guard and Protector; the other like the Devil, endeavoured to enfnare him: fee Servius on this place of Virgil:

Quisque suos patitur manes.

The Asserters of this Opinion say, that Man receives his Genius from the Stars, at the same time with his Soul; who preserving or observing him here, brings him after this Life to a state of Happiness, or resigns him over to Punishment. So Horace:

Genius Director of our Native Star, The God of Humane Nature—

And afterwards he says, His Countenance was variable, white and black, that they might make Genius to be a Monitor as well as an Observer of Humane Actions.

That which inclin'd the Antient Philosophers to this Opinion, was their supposing God did not intermeddle with the particular Government of the World, therefore thought it necessary that a particular Genius should preside over every Man; that The Most Great and Good God could not have a certain account of their Inclinations and Actions, and so determine of their suture State, unless every Individual Person had a Genius from his Nativity. Others (as we said before) are of another Opinion. Those that are solicitous about the Welfare of the Female Sex, allow them a Juno instead of a Genius to the Men.

There were many antient Representations of Gewing: Some like a Serpent; but that was mystically, to do

Ha

Bo

ce

El by

Ge

T

L

an hi ke

de

0 di

ar

di

in

W

tl

h

C

G

t

S

P

to express a Renovation of Life; others, in his right Hand a Dish adorn'd with Nosegays, which he fees on an Altar, his left holding a small Flail hanging down, or fome fuch thing: fome exhibit him like a Boy, others a Youth, and others an Old Man. Concerning Genius first under the form of a Boy, and then of a Serpent, see Pausanias, Eliac. in Poster. The Elians erected an Altar to him, for a Victory obtain'd by his Affistance. The same Author speaks of an Evil Genius that encounter'd Euthymus, and overcame him. There was a great affinity between the Genii and Lares; wherefore the Romans fet up and worshipp'd the most Eminent of both of them in the Cross-ways, and where three Roads met. Every one worshipp'd his own Genius feparately; but especially when he kept his Birth day. At which time, Persons being devoted to all forts of Mirth and Jollity, were faid Indulgere Genio: or on the contrary, Genium defraudare. Ovid calls it, Festum Geniale, and Epula Geniales, in Claudianus de Rapt. Proferp. and Lectus Genialis, Virg. Eneid. and Thorus Genialis; that which was made for a Wedding, a day of Mirth and Pleasure was called Genialis, in honour of the Genii; fo Juvenal, That day shall pass for Genial, That the Genius (especially that of Princes) was had in great Veneration, is evident from this. that who foever had fworn by his Genius, and violated his Oath, should suffer the same Punishment as the most notorious perjur'd Person. Suetonius says, that Caligula us'd to punish those that never swore by his Genius; concluding thence that he was despised by them. They offer'd Wine and Flowers to their Genius on their Birth-day; they abstain'd from Bloody Sacrifices, thinking it unreasonable to take away the Life of any thing on the Day they receiv'd their own. Censorinus adds, that when these sacred Rites were perform'd to the Genius, no one might taste before him that was Master of the Feast. Authors say, The Plane-tree was sacred to the Genius, and that he was crown'd with it; perhaps because as Elian says, An Oul would not come where a Plane-leaf was: but sometimes he was crown'd with Flowers, according to Tibullus:

At his own Honours Genius does attend, And flowry Garlands round his Temples bend:

Plutarch says a great deal more of the Genii in his Book of the Ceasing of Oracles, where he endeavours to prove, that one Genius exceeded another in Virtue, Wisdom and Power. In the Description of the XIV Districts of Rome, mention is made of Temples to the Genii of Children, and others to the Genii of the Lares; and a little Chapel to Genii Sangi in the 7th District: and I do not meet with any more publick Temples or Chapels erected to the Genii, their private Adoration being so extensive.

PENATES.

Now proceed to the Penates and Lares, as Deities of nearest Assinity, as Dion. Hal. informs us. They are call'd Penates or Penites, being nearest at hand, and most appropriated. He calls them also Mychioi, from Mychius, which signifies Penetrale, and Questuarii or Fortunatores, as some call Jupiter and Mercury. Others calls them Penates, from Patrous or Patrios; others Genethlii or Natalitii, others Herchii, because they confine themselves within the limits of every ones house. He also mentions Temples where their Images were, and is of opinion that D, was the first Letter of the word before P.

noise that though one water

Cisero

Pen

for

COI

011 mi

tel

Per

in

an וער

DI

-00

1

0 n

n

n

1

Penates, from Penus, which is every thing that is Food for Man: or because penitus insident, upon which account the Poets calls them Penetrales. They did not only preside over and preserve the Master of the Family, but his Guests also. And Cicero and Ovid both tell us, it was accounted a most Notorious Crime, to Murder a Stranger in the Presence of the Dis Penatis. They were Represented like young Men in a War-like Habit, with Spears in their Hands; some say they are Apollo and Neptune, others Castor and Pollux, others say, the Penates are Deities themselves, in their own proper Form.

They were Worshipped in the most inward part of the House, before the Master of the Family went about any Business. So Demipho in Terence says, He was going Home to Worship his Penates, and then return to the Forum to dispatch Business. When they were angered, they sacrificed unto them to make them propitious. Horace 3. Carm. speaks of appealing the Penates by Sacrifices. The Dictators and other Magistrates of Rome, sacrificed to the Penates and Vesta that Day on which they entered upon their Office.

Temptes to the Large, Turarch writes, that the Larer properly care a Ronardid affilt the Day;

Some are of Opinion, that Lares and Genii are the fame, and the Penates are not much different from both. Apuleius in his Book de Deo Socratis, fays, that the Lares were formerly called Lemures, or Spectres; but certainly Lar has a more tender meaning; for the Lemures or Lara, were only Punishers of the Wicked, but the Lares were kind, familiar, and Domestick Deities, and therefore Worship'd within the Walls of the House. The Fire-Hearth

Hearth was facred to the Lares, whence comes the word Foculare, the Focus Laris. Near the Forum, was a Lararium, or Repository for the Lares. Lampridius writes, that Alexander Severus had two Lararia's; in one he kept the Images of Christ, Abraham, Orpheus, and Apollonius, and the Effigies of Cicero and Virgil in the other. They were reputed the Guardians of the Fields, and the whole City, as well as Private Houses. Festus says, Balls, and the Effigies of Men and Women, were hung up at the Cross-ways, and these Festivals were kept there, according to same Author. Varro affims, that the Compitalia were Days devoted to the Lares; but Cicero calls them Dies Compitalitii, who also makes mention of the Sports used at them. There were as many Balls as Heads of Servants, and as many Effigies as Children, that they might spare the Living, and be content with Balls and Images. Pliny lib. 36. informs us, that Servius Tullus was the first that instituted the Compitalia and Sports to the Lares, and tells the occasion, that lying down in the Palace, his Head feem'd to burn, and he believed that he was the Son of the familiar Lar: But Varro fays that Titus Tatius, King of the Sabines, was the first that Vow'd, and built Temples to the Lares. Plutarch writes, that the Lares properly called Prastites, did affift the Dog; and these Lares were Clothed with a Dog's Skin, because (says he) the Care and Custody of the House being committed to their Charge, they ought to be a Terrour to all others, and tame, and tender towards the Family, as the nature of Dogs is. In the Aulular. of Plautus, a Lar himself tells, what Rites were perform'd to them; He has an only Daughter, the every Day offers up her Supplications to me, either with Frankincense, Wine, or some other such-like things, and gives me a Garland; They had also a Woollen Hair-Lace Hearth lace that Con Mar

Lar

-513

Cha

Bell-Cicer bled

bein

who

Flight like their in the Yow they dicate the Y troub riv'd 'Heart ry p

Soul

That

lace given them, according to Ovid. The Meat that was offer'd unto them from the Table, was Consum'd by Fire, for it was held impious for any Man to taste it. Propertius lib. 4. gives us an account of the Sacrifices that were offer'd up to the Lar in the Cross-Ways. -north that ad

A small Swine, made Lustration in Cross-Ways.

Bell-weathers were likewise sacrificed to the Lares. Cicero de Leg. also says, the Familiar Lares were troubled at his departure. It was the common Opinion. that fingly they prefided over Private Families; but being join'd together, had the Care and Safeguard of whole Cities. Propertius fays, they put Hanibal to Flight: And Festus says, they facrificed to the Warlike Lares, because they imagin'd they had Routed their Enemies. These had a Temple and Chapel in the Eighth Division of the City; they had also a Grove and Chapel. L. Amilius Regulus made Vows in the Campus Martius to the Marine Lares, that they might affift him in his Sea-Fights. Curfius dedicated an Altar to the Lares Prastites, that preserv'd the Walls of the City. Cicero lib. 2. de Legibus, fays, That the Lares were very angry, that a Temple to Licentiousness was Rebuilt in their Jurisdiction. I shall not trouble you with the Fable of the word's being deiv'd from Lara or Larunda. The Greeks called them House get' oixias, or remercialos, from whence it is vely probable, that the Heathens did believe that the Souls of some Heroes did become Lares.

the sand dayde v Ratiola. and but Plate cadamather and expense and hadrin their that the

They fall their work thing Judges.

Linux and Michellegions of wheelther

e

S

b

d

-

PLUTO.

PLUTO the Son of Saturn and Ops, and Brother of Jupiter and Neptune, was esteem'd to have the Government of the Infernal Regions. Diod. Sic. gives the Reason, saying, he first Invented Funeral Rites, and Parental Obsequies.

He was called Orcus or Horcus, from the Oath which the Heathens swore by; by which Name also, he is accounted amongst the Select Gods. The Poets fabulously report, that he had the Government of Hell, as Jupiter has of Heaven, Neptune of the Sea and Water; fo all things here below, especially, the Subterranean were under the direction of Pluto. But the Jurisdictions of these Brethren were not so entire, and distinct, but they did often interfere with each other, and Jupiter and Neptune did sometimes Exercise an Authority on Earth: Pluto and Neptune in the Heavens, Jupiter and Pluto on the Sea. Pluto was called the God of Riches; for Plutos, from whence his Name is derived, fignifies Riches; and by the Latines also he is called, Dis, from Di-This is properly to be understood of tare to Enrich. Pluto, as he had Command over the interior Parts of the Earth, from whence Metals are dug; for as he was God of Hell, he did not confer Wealth on Men, but Rewards and Punishments. For after this Life, Poets and Philosophers faid, there was a Meadow called the Field of Truth, which had two Paths, one leading to the Isles of Happiness, and the other to the Place of Punishment.

They said there were three Judges. Accus, Minos, and Rhadamanthus, who knew all that Men had done whilst they lived here on Earth Rhadamanthus and Accus, had Rods in their Hands

whilf

P

11 ol

M ria be

m ric

H

PA

th

no

in

me

Pre

of

Ma

Sce

ons

4

8

16 0

91

end

he

es,

5;

Di-

ot

erts

25

on this leaths,

ther

scus, that

arth

ands

hilf

whilst they passed Judgment: Minos sat by himself, and held a Golden Sceptre in his Hand, Deliberating of every ones particular Case; according to their Opinion, Souls stood by Naked, being divefled of their Bodies, and destitute of all External coverture; fo that the Judges could clearly Penetrate into their most secret and intimate Thoughts. and from thence make a just Judgment of their Principal Actions. Plato and his Disciples explain the Mystical Sense of these Fictions, who unanimously affert, that there are Rewards and Punishments for the Souls of Men after this Life, or elfe the Operations and Dictates of Conscience would be to no purpose, if there were not another State, either of Happinels or Milery. Eusebine gives us another Mystical Interpretation of Plato's, and fays, Porphyrim Represented the Sun, under that Notion, who being little conversant with us in the Winter, but more with our Antipodes is said to Govern the inferiour Parts of the World, scarce enlightning our Hemisphere. By Proserpiene's being detained by Pluto, is meant, that Pluto or the Sun doth preferve the Seminal Power (which, as we faid before, is denoted by Proferpine) either concealed in himself, or in the Husk that contains the Seed; this needs no more Explication. The Poets Represented him, prefiding over the Ghofts, and fitting King in Hell; of which Claudian, Leaning on's Rod, with direful Majesty Enthron'd be fits : Nauseous Squallidity Environs his vast Sceptres .-

Martianus Capella, gives him an Ebony Crown and Sceptre, because he was King of the Infernal Regions. Homer, Plato, and Hyginus write, that he carried ried an Helmet, which if any Person put on, he was invisible to all Men, tho he saw every Body; which may very well be understood of the occult Power of the Sun, when he is not seen by us. By the assistance of this Helmet, it was (as the Poets tell us) that Perseus overcame Medusa, and that Minerous borrowed it from him. Cerberus lies at his Feet (as Fulgentius has it) who, according to the Opinion of some, is imagin'd to have three Heads, to shew that three things are necessary for Seed to be Productive, That it be spread on the Ground, That it be covered with it, and That it sprout when covered.

Pindar describes Pluto with a Rod in his Hand, with which he drives Souls down to Hell, that he may either keep them there, or dismiss them as he judges convenient: The Antients place him in a Chariot, drawn by four Black Horfes, blowing Fire out of their Nostrils. Orcus or Pluto was formerly called Agefilaus, because, He drives all People; and according to Cyril, Orcus and Adoneus, who was King of Molossus. Orcus also signifies Hell it self; he is also called Summanus, as Summus Manium, the Superintendent of Ghosts; according to others Summanus, was only the God of Night. Ovid in his Fasti speaks dubioufly of him. Allor was another of his Names, ab Alendo, because all things receive Nourishment from the Earth; and Rurfor, to which all things return again; and Februus, because the Februa and Expiations had a respect to the future State below, of which he was God. Orcus had a Temple in the Tenth district of Rome; Summanus had a Chapel in the Eighth, and in the Sixth, which Titus Tating vowed, according to Varro. became he was king of the beside el mery Plate and accommence to the letter

I

pi

0

m

The Parcæ and Furies.

HE Parca, or Destinies and Furies, were formerly esteemed, Pluto's or Orcus's Champions. I shall speak of the Parce hereafter; and shall only hint fome few things concerning the Furies, which were Alecto, Tysiphone and Megara; to whom fome add Lyssa for a fourth, for the real Furies are in our felves, which are inordinate Defire, Anger, and Lust. Cicero de Leg. substitutes Horror of Conscience. instead of the Furies. They were by the Antients thought to be the Ministers of Pluto, and sometimes made Sallies out of Hell to punish Mortals: they were Worshipped like the Dii Averrunci, that they might not hurt Men, and to divert impending Misfortunes. Therefore Paufanias in his Atticks fays, the Greeks facrificed to them.

The Furies had facred Rites and Altars belonging to them, as other Deities had. Cicero lib. 2. de N.D. fays, they beheld and punished all Villainous Actions. The Scycionians facrificed Eggs just Hatcht to them, but it was, as I think, by the Name of the Eumenides, which fignifies Benevolent and Mild; they as'd to offer Wine mixt with Honey, and Garlands of Flowers. The Eumenides had a Shrine, both in Achaia and Athens, as Cicero tells us; they Brandished lighted Torches in their Hands, and had Grey Hair interwoven with Snakes, fee Ovid. Met. 4. The Furies were not only at Phuto's Devoir, but Fupiter, Juno and Hecate employ'd them and the rest of the Infernal Retinue when they fent War, Famine, and Pestilence; or such like Calamities amongst Mankind.

nt

X-

ot

ne

in

ins

The

COLOR

The HARPIES.

Hey were like the Furies, only they had the Faces of Virgins; they were fent from the Infernal Regions, to inflict Punishment on the Wicked. Ovid, Virgil, and Statius, have feveral Descriptions of them, which I shall not infert. The Lamie and Stryges, are all of the fame Company, and some say the Sphynges. Cicero lib. 2. de N. D. speaks of the Goddess Furina, and of a Grove at Rome sacred to her: But it is not to my purpose to treat of all thefe, especially, because the Religion of the Antients was fo intermixt with Fables, that it will be hard to distinguish what the Priest and what the Poet invented. I shall finish my List of Gods with Janus, for the' he is esteem'd by some, the first of Select Gods; yet the subsequent Off-spring of Deities, inclin'd me rather to begin with Saturn and Fupiter.

JANUS.

JANUS was the most Antient King of Latium, the Son of Calum and Hecate, whose extraordinary merit procured Divine Honours to be paid him. Some will have him to be the same as Ogyges, or Noah, others faphet, Noah's Son, and others fawan. Authors tell us, he entertain'd Saturn very courteously, during his Exile; but especially, because he was the first that instructed Men in Agriculture, by which means he reduced Mankind to a more regular way of Living, and Coin'd Money for Traffick and Commerce.

Janus is said to be the first that erected Altars, instituted Religious Rives and Ceremonies, therefore

fa

d

N

F

m fr

h

W

ſe

m

Sc

pl

th

W

W

th

in

A

fie

fore he is mention'd at the beginning of all Sacrifices, and Bread-Corn and Wine are offer'd up to him; he is invoked by the appellation of Father. He Invented Folding-doors, Locks and Keys, for the fecurity of Houses; and a Door is called fanua from fanus, and the first Month fanuary for the same Reason. He Consecrated the Bounds and Altars for the Husbandmen; and to continue them, then newly in their Business, he gave each of them a Rod of a White Thorn (from thence called, fanales) and Fasces, or Bundles of Twigs.

He is Represented with a Rod, Key, and twelve Altars for the twelve Months, fet under his Feet. Macrobius and Pliny tell us of an Image of his that was in the Capitol, contriv'd fo, that with the Fingers of his Right Hand, he expressed three Hundred, and with his Left fixty Five, to Exhibit the dimension of the Year. See Calius Rhodiginus, who from thence derived the method of Accounting; he is faid to be the Inventer of Ships, Bridges and Crowns. On some Coins, Janus is Represented with two Faces on one fide, and on the other a Ship, or the Stem or Stern of one. Those that Reprefent him with two Faces fay, he had that in Common with Noah, who had observed two Worlds. Some make him with four Faces, as he is in his Temple, but that has Reference to the four Seasons of the Year. Cicero fays, he is called Janus, from Eanus; but Vossius derives it from Jain in the Hebrew, which fignifies Wine; and that Italy, which formerly was Oenotria, was so called from him also. Janus then, or Noah, after the Flood came to Italy, but not in an Ark. Cyril calls Noab Xyluthius, who adds the Affrian word is derived from Ziz or Zus, and fignihes Posts or Thresholds; so that thus also Janus, was Noab.

R 4

Tho'

Tho' it is impossible to Extricate these things out of the dark Mists of Antiquity, so that unquestionable Truth may appear; yet I shall endeavour to handle fome of the most Principal. He did not only preside over the Doors here on Earth, but in Heaven also; for when (according to Homer) they were that to their Prayers, he did, as it were, hold out his Hand, and support them, that they might be capable of going, and procur'd them an admiffion into Heaven. Janus was esteem'd to have the Power of Peace and War; and hence came the Ceremony of Opening and Shutting the Foldingdoors in his Temple, and the Names of Patuleius and Clusius, or Chisinus, have reference to it. Virgil Aneid. 7. very elegantly describes the manner of Opening his Temple when War was Proclaim'd. Servius fays, it was shut but thrice by the Romans. In Numa's time, after the first Punick War, and after the Battels of Actium, which Augustus did, tho' there were Civil Wars at the same time; the Romans being continually at Wars, for so many Years together. The Confuls were inaugurated in his Temple, from whence they are faid to begin the Year. There were two or three Janus's in the Forum at Rome, where Merchants met together, as a Place Famous for transacting Business. Here also the Usures used to Refort; whence Ovid fays of some Person, Returning Months, the Judge and Janus fears.

Janus sometimes Mystically signified the Sun, and Universal Nature it self. Septimius comprehends most of what is said concerning Janus in these Verses.

nos l'obs or Thresholds; sin char rous alto Janes,

Ch

CITE

11/2

·nii

als

In

Wa

74

he

and

the Fa

Go

by

by

he Se

far

th

th

ça

Janus, we Parent thee and Patron call,
The Two-Fac'd God and wise Original,
Of all things here, and the Celestial.
The Gods themselves from thee, beginning had;
Thy Doors oft move, and Thresholds are much trod.
To thee the secrets of the World are known,
The Aborigines thy Antient Altars own.

I mention'd some of Janus his Names before; he was called Junonius, because the Calends are from Juna; Conservius à Conserendo, from Sowing, because he taught it Mankind; and Quirinus Potent in War, and some call him Portunus, because he presided over the Gates, and had a Key in his Hand as well as Janus; in the Hymns of the Salii, he was called the God of Gods.

These were his Temples; the sirst was Built by Romulus, or according to some, by Numa, another by Duillius, after the sirst Punick War, and restor'd by Tiberius; and a third very magnisseent, of a Quadrangular Form, dedicated by Augustus. There was a Temple of Janus Curiatius Built by Horatius, in Commemoration of that Famous Fight, in which he Slew Curiatius. Mention also is made of Janus Septimianus, but it is so obscure, that I cannot affert any thing of it for Truth. Procopius lib 1. Bell. Gotb. says, Janus had a Brazen Chapel in the middle of the Forum, over against the Capitol. Varro says, there were Castles sacred to Janus in all Parts of the City. See Brod. lib. 2. cap. 19. and Magius lib. 2. cap. 12. concerning Janus Medius.

west that, was votted and and fast, what is said before, more probable;

was the Pather of the Peas got Sarger at

Of the Common D E I T I E S.

Having treated of the Privy Counsellors and Nobility in this Celestial Republick of the Heathens; I proceed to their Commonalty, that it may bear some Analogy with ours. Ovid in Ibin, having first invok'd the Gods of the Superiour Class, says, Te common Gods, the Lares, Fauns and Satyrs; Rivers and Nymphs, and Gods of middle Natures.

Again, either he, or Virgil:

We are poor petty Deities, Whom only Rusticks strive to please.

Virgil makes Faunus the Father of the Fauns, Satyrs and other Country Deities, whom Aurelius Victor esteems the same as Sylvanus or Pan; the Fauns, Sylvans and Satyrs, were Represented almost alike; with short Tails, and their lower part Rough and Hairy. Lucian says, that the Satyrs had sharp Ears, were Bald, and had two Horns on their Forehead. Philostratus gives them an Humane Face, and Goats Feet; on which account Pliny says, they are very swist, and extraordinary salacious, much addicted to Drunkenness, and therefore called the Companions of Bacchus. Pausanias reports, that when they were old, they were called Silens. Silenus Rode on an Ass, and was an Associate of Bacchus, and some say his School-Master; he had a Temple in Elis.

Pan also, as a Rural God, was both Man and Goat, which makes what I said before, more probable; that he was the Father of the Fauns and Satyrs. I shall

Chap

hall 1

hat Fable

al Na

whon

So Vi

den I led t

ten i

in VC

Repr

Nake ple t

Pan

With

Ten

Erat

and

thei

Ten

the

call

very

Goa

mal

Fati

tati

Con

cre

We

hall leave the Story of his Pipe, and Eccho, a Nymph hat he was Enamour'd with, and many such-like Fables to others. Pan Myffically fignifies Univeral Nature; but this cannot be the fame with him, whom the Poets tell us, was only a Rural Deity. So Virgil, Pan, Keeper of the Sheep; that is, from fudden Frights, which are called Panick; therefore called the God of Shepherds. The terrors that very often feize on Men, especially in Battel, were not only called Panick by the Antients, but the word is in vogue at this very Day. This Mystical Pan was Represented like Jupiter Lycaus, some part of his Body being covered with a Goats-Skin, and the reft Naked. Justin lib. 43. gives an account of a Temple that was Built him at the Foot of Mount Palatine. Pan was Worshipped by the Egyptians and Arcadians, with the same Ceremonies as those called the Dis Majorum Gentium; a Fire was kept perpetually in his Temple, and Oracles delivered there by the Nymph Erato. The Athenians believed he often appeared and affifted in Engagements at War, pofferfing their Enemies with Panick Fears; they founded him a Temple in the Wood Parthenia; they esteemed him the Author of Apparitions and unufual Sounds, fo called Faunus (who was Pan alfo) a Fando; he had very many Names. Agipan which is Pan the Half-Goat : Innus from his Copulating with some Animals, and Incubus for the same Reason, Ephialtes, Fatuus and Fatuelis. For their Mystical Interpretation, fee Boccace and other Mythologists, and Const. Geopon. lib. 1. about the Pine that was held facred to him. So much for Pan, who was God of the Fields; the Fauns and Satyrs, who were Gods of the Groves; and the Sylvans, who were Gods of the Woods, There

There were other Rural or Common Deinies. Pales. to whom the Palilia or Parilia; and Flora, to whom the Florilia were dedicated; where the Women. especially, Whores fought like Gladiators, with sharp Weapons, and Run and Danc'd Stark Naked. Pamona, the Goddess of Fruit; and Vortumnus, who was reputed to preside over the turning and contracting of things, whose Festivals were called, Vortumnalia; some say he presided over Mens Thoughts, and the Year it felf, and assumed various Figures, according to the times; see Propertim. Vortumnus had a Statue and Temple in the Tuscan There were Tutanus and Tutelina, whose Office was to Protect things: They that superintended over Grain, were Seia, Goddess of the Sowers; No. dotus, Volutina, Patelena, Segesta, Hostilina, Lacturtia, Lastens, Matuta and Runtina; They Worshipped Frutesca, as a Goddess that presided over Fruit. Spinenfis, to root out Thorns; and Robigus, to preferve the Corn from Mildew, his Festivals were called Robigalia; Fulgora, to prevent Lightning; and Populonia, against Depopulations. The Bakers paid great Adoration to Pilumnus, as the Inventer of their Trade. Picumnus and Stercutius, for Teaching the Dunging of Ground. Bubona, Hippona and Mellona, who prefided over the Kine, Horses and Bees. Amongst these Rural Deities, we may add Jugatinus, who had Power over the tops of Mountains; Collina, over Hills; Vallonia, over Vallies; and Rusina, who had the management of Country Affairs; Terminus, was also Worshipped for preserving the Limits of their Land, he was either Consecrated by Tatius or Numa. Tarquinius designing to build a Temple to Jupiter O. M. in the Capitol, intended to pull down the Temple of other Gods, that it might be very spacious; see Dion. Hal. Livy, Ovid, St. Augu-(ting fine Term cede

Cha

ble ing diffe

2013

SHE

F

mor one Litt Flat Virg

Fort

eith

fay regu wei bui

For

wit ted

rou Plin

pad par it v

to us,

Do

fine and others, where it is pleasantly reported, that Terminus and Juventus would not in the least concede to him.

The Goddess Fortune, being not properly reducible to any Class, and yet the Antient Romans, paying so great Adoration unto her, I thought six to discourse of her in this place.

ņ

70.00

S

20.00

,

.

d

d

S

1

r

0

11

34

FORTUNE.

Tortune had many Glorious Appellations given her, and a splendid Temple erected for her; more particularly by Servius Tullius, who dedicated one to Fortune Primigenia, Obsequious, Private, Viscous, Little, Bearded Fortune, of Good Hope, Evil Diverting, Flattering, Plebeian, Converting, Hoping well, and the Virgin. Ancus Martius, dedicated a Temple to Virile Fortune. Female Fortune, also had a Temple, where either her Priests or the old Women report her to say; Matrons, you have seen me, and dedicated me very regularly, and exactly; none but new Married Persons were permitted to Worship her. Q. Fulvius Flaccus, built a most magnificent Temple for Equestrian Fortune:

Fors Fortuna, was Worship'd by those who lived without doing any business. Servius Tullius dedicated a Temple to her; the Temple of Fortune, dedicated by D. Catulus, is still remaining. The Emperour Nero built an House to Fortune Seja, of which Pliny says, in Nero's time a Stone was found in Cappadocia, as hard as Marble, and White, but Transparent in that part where there were yellow Veins, it was called Phengites; with this he built a Temple to Fortune, called Seja, Consecrated by King Servius, inclos'd in a Gilded House; so that tho' the Doors were shut, it was clear Light, after the manner of Looking-Glaffes, the Light being inclos'd not transmitted in. Fortuna Mammosa had a Temple at the upper-end of the New Way, from which the Street took its Name, as another did from Dubious Fortune Domitian built a Temple to Fortuna Redux; she had an Altar erected unto her for the return of Augustus, Fortuna Regia, had a Temple at Hera and Praneste. but they join'd her with Hercules, Profera and Fides, which feems to be a very agreeable Dedication ; for whofoever shall violate his Fidelity, cannot reasonably expect Fortune will be propitious to him. This Goddess was esteem'd to have Power and Authority over those things, whose Causes were most occult and unknown. The Romans were those, who chiefly Worship'd her; for Spondanus has well observ'd, Homer never mentions her: She was neither Worship'd by the Greeks, nor the Eastern People, unless Venus Urania may have some Analogy with her; for both of them were thought to bestow Profperity on Mankind, on some singular occasions. So I conclude with Fortune.

Those that are desirous to know more of the Country, City, and Miscellaneous Deities; as Cloacina, Fugia, Rediculus, or Ridiculus, and Minutius: those that insest Mankind, as Pavor, Pallor, Februs, Tempestas, the Vocal; not only Ajus Locutus, but many more Invented by the Priests: Nuptial, or those that presided over Women in Travel, and Insants; let them consult our Criticks; I have insisted so long on the Explication of the Gods of the Superiour Class, that I shall pass these over as less considerable.

CHAP.

Ch

the

pla

at

cer

nit

ce

fh

th

th

W

aı

F

al the die de

d

1 15

0

t

CHAP. XIII.

Of the SUPREAM GOD.

TAving given an account of the Oeconomical constitution of the Celestial Body, according to the Doctrine of the Heathers; it remains that I explain what Head it was that prefided over them, that at last we may come to speak of those things, for which, according to their own Principles, we afcend, and have admittance into Heaven. Now it is clear beyond all dispute, that this only can be, that SUPREAM GOD, who is, and will be, to all Eternity. For tho' the Heathens did often dispute, concerning some Attributes or Properties of God, as I shall shew hereafter, yet I am of Opinion, that neither the Learned nor Ignorant did ever question, that there always was, and now is, one Supream God. But, whether that God had an Eternal Principle from himself, but so that the World was Coeternal with him; or whether he preceeded it in Order, Dignity and Power; but not in time, and Fashion'd and Form'd this Mundane Matter, in the Shape and Figure we behold it in's or Created the very Matter it felf at first, and out of it made the World, is a thing much controverted by the Antients. Those that own God to be an Eternal Principle, and yet deny his being the Maker of the World, have very jejune Sentiments concerning him; for no Person can be fo abfurd to imagine, that the World was produc'd without any cause (be it whatsoever it will) or can pretend to find a more excellent than the Supream God himself. The second Opinion, that the Supream God did not only form the World out of the Chaos at the beginning, ning, but is continually so doing; ridiculously implying this sluggish lump of Matter of which the World is compos'd to be equally Eternal, consounding the Cause with the Effect.

There were many of the Antients of the third Opinion (or fomething near it) that the World was Created in Time. Fr. Patricius gives us a large Catalogue of them; fo that before Ocellus Lucanus's time, and Aristotle after him, there were none that afferted the Eternity of the World, if we can credit Patricius: Both Opinions, that the World was from all Eternity; and that it is still a Making and Forming, had many Champions; for the Fews and Christians, only had the knowledge of the World's being made in fix Days; and there are many amongst them that strain the whole History of the Creation. of the World to an Allegorical Sense. Cicero amongst the Antients, is clear in the Point of the World's being made, lib. de Univer. he fays, That God did Make and Form the World; again, lib. 2. de N. D. The World was made in the Beginning for the sake of the Gods and Men; and de Univer. The Eternal God Created this perfeetly Bleffed Deity (that is the World). But we cannot infer from these words, whether Matter was first made, and then the World. See Proclus and Jobannes Grammaticus, on this subject in his Book de Aternitate Mundi; where all that can be faid on either side, is most exquisitely Discuss'd; but it is not certain, whether Proclus followed Plato or not, for as Marsil. Ficinus, in his Compendium on Timaus, has it; If you consult the Interpretations of Severus Atticus and Plutarch, and many more whom Proclus mentions, you'll collect from Plato, that the World was not Eternal; but if you have recourse to Crantor, Plotinus, Porphyrius, Jamblichus, and Proclus, and divers others, you'll think he was of Opinion, that it was Eternal, but continually. beyon Worl
from
on G its O

Cha

Pyth very ject Mun own nal but the finit thef

fay,

and appror in Perf shall for a clud rath of the not nou Aut

of]

continually proceeding from God; whom, if we consider, as beyond all beginning of time, we must conclude, that the World was not made; but if it be continually proceeding from God, it is daily producing, and doth depend as much on God, and will always do so, as if it at once received its Original from bim. Plato, or according to some Pythagoras, whom, Plato in his Timans follows, argues very accurately and clearly; whatfoever is the Object of Sense, had a beginning, but such are all Mundane things; therefore it is evident by their own way of arguing, that the World had its Original from God. Some of the Followers of Epicurus fay, that the World is not only compos'd of Atoms, but that all visible things owe their Original to the fortuitous Concourse of them, and that the Infinitely Bleffed God, would not involve himself in these Affairs; thus Lucretius lib. 2.

Tho' Natures Origine may be Divine, What is't to us, few Beauties in it Shine:

So others of this Sect attribute all things to Chance and Fortune, according to which Doctrine I cannot apprehend, how there could be any Kinds, Species, or indeed any agreeable Series of things; for if any Person that hath not forseited the use of Reason, shall observe a Watch, shewing the Hours exactly, for a Day and Night together, will presently conclude it the product of Art and Labour; how much rather, who does but contemplate the vast Machine of this World, persorming its Motions so regularly, not for 24 Hours only, but so many Ages, will promounce it to proceed from an all Wise and Powerful Author.

The Afferters of this Opinion, shew a great deal of Ingenuity and Artifice to support this absurdity, as way at as

as if Reason and Order did not obtain in Things as as well as Words, or that they only should be endu'd with an intellectual Faculty, and Chance should direct all others; this Error is sufficiently consuted

A

DI

ri

ha

or

to

M

of

boi

for

Lib

fible

as I

fent

thin

rew

The

alcri

all I

the .

I

to E fure,

stent

tertai

Cour

poffi

is fuf

can,

and

B

Supp

ities

by Cicero in feveral places.

But these Opinions concerning the Original of the World, were only Bandied amongst the Philosophers, and exceeded the comprehension of the Vulgar; they were contented to know, that from all Ages, things had been fo circumftantiated that they might live comfortably here, if they were but industrious; they regarded nothing elfe, unless, observing some Internal Power or Deity, Operating in the World; they thought it was in his Power to take the Bleffings they enjoyed from them, or them from the Bleffings. This latent Power or Deity, they readily acknowledged to be the Original of all things, whose Causes they were ignorant of; but their Searches and farther Endeavours after a more clear knowledge of him, generally proved infuccefful, nor could they attain to more than that all things in all Ages did proceed from that Supream Principle, at whose Pleasure it was, whether things ever had been fuch as they were, or had continued for They prefently judg'd it their Duty and Interest to Supplicate this God, to divert Evil from them, and bestow his Favours on them, and that they ought to pay all respect to his chief Ministers. When they contemplated on these things, they either fram'd a fort of Religious Worship from those Notions they had of God, or some Internal Dictates, or receiv'd it from the Priefts; every one acknowledging his God to be the Most Good and Great, and Good before Great, thinking it inconsistent, that he should be most Great, that was not Most Good, for the Goodness of God must necessarily be anteceden to his Power.

GOD being thus acknowledg'd to be Most Good and Great, they began to confider whether any other Attributes belong'd to him; this also obtain'd, and other Attributes were given him, but fuch as were comprehended under the former. For if we have but a right Notion of these Attributes, all that the Schools have added, are either contain'd in them, or they are only those which the Mind of Man can have recourfe to with confidence; so that if we call him Just, Merciful, Wife, Omnipotent or Infinite; they found all of them either in each of the former, or in them both together. For being Most Good, he did provide for all, in doing which he must be Just, Merciful and Liberal: also as he is Most Great, nothing is imposfible to him, nor is he inscrib'd within any simits; as he is Most Good and Great together, he is represented as the most wife and prudent Author of all things, and their Preserver and Governour; justly rewarding the Virtuous, and punishing the Wickeds These Attributes of Most Good and Great have been ascrib d to God in all Ages, and will continue fo to all Eternity, containing all that can be known of the Supream God, by the affiftance of Reason.

I readily acknowledge, That God's devoting some to Eternal Damnation out of his meer good Pleafure, and for his Glory and Honour, is not consider with these Attributes; but it is impious to entertain such thoughts of the Supream God, tho' his Counsels are secret and clos'd to us, so that it is impossible for Mortals to penetrate into them; yet it is sufficient for us that we are secure that he neither can, nor will recede from his Attributes of Most Good and Great.

e

n

y

Ill

ut

re ef-

all

am

ngs

ued

nte-

em,

hey

ters.

y ei-

hole

ates,

now-

and at he

d, for eden

GOD

But to make this a little more evident: Let us appose a Man of very Extraordinary Natural Abiities, but hath received no external Informations, by Traditions, Revelations, or otherwise; I conceive he will have the same Sentiments concerning this World, when he has made some considerable Ob. fervations concerning it, as he would have upon the first fight of a Musical Instrument curiously made. that is was not jumbled together by blind Chance: or that which admits of fuch variety of Parts, could be Self-productive. But when he hears an excellent Musician play upon it, he'll presently admire both the Ingenuity of the Artificer that made it, and the great Skill of the Master that toucht it so melodiously; and conclude all things were contrived and concerted for this end. He will not hence in the least conclude, that for that reason there should be two Artificers; but that both the Instrument and Harmony had their Original from the Principles of the same Art.

8 2

If it should be objected, That such diversity of things as are in the Universe, proceeding from so many different Causes, necessarily implies Plurality of Gods; for there would be too much business for only one, and it would be impossible for him to perform so many things of such quite different Natures; and that the World could not have been made so perfect and compleat, but it would have been very defective.

To this I answer: The more indifferent the Instrument is, the more doth the Musician shew his Skill to make such melodious Harmony with dissonant and different Strings; but yet the Instrument that performs those things, was not made in a hurry, but with deliberate Consideration.

In short, the more, not only Diversity, but Contrariety and Repugnancy there is in the Nature of things, it sends us the sooner to some one Supream God or Deity, that regulates and keeps all things in fuch

fuch

fupp

proc

ridio

a St

and

we

toit

fron

to b it W

whi

mo

pea

are

Eler

any

in I

me

Ha

Op

Stu

for

and

the

lut

exa

Vi

wh

it f

010 fini

is

I

ive

his

)b.

On

de,

ce;

ıld

el-

ire

nd

10-

nd

he

be nd

of

of

fo

ty

10 -1:

s;

fo

гу

niis

0-nt

1-

of 772

n h suppose that some things of less moment might be produc'd by Hap or Chance; but it is monstrous and ridiculous to imagine it of this World, that is of such a Superlative Magnitude, so Beautiful and Sublime, and regularly dispos'd and order'd in all its parts, that we can neither see or conceive any thing comparable to it. For if one of the Elements should be remov'd from its proper Situation but for one day, it is not to be imagin'd what Commotions and Convulsions it would put the whole Frame of Nature into; of which its aversion to a Vacuum is a sufficient Demonstration.

Perhaps it may be said, That there doth not appear any such exquisite Disposition in it, for the Stars are not situated in any Mathematical order, and the Elements feem jumbled and mixt together.

I answer, If a Person ignorant of Musick should see any Books where our Letters are so irregularly plac'd in pricking Tunes, he would be ready to think they meant nothing; but when he hears what excellent Harmony is made of them, he'll soon change his Opinion, and conclude that a great deal of Art and Study went to compleat the Composure.

This is very applicable to the Stars and Elements; for tho' the parts of the World seem to be consus'd, and very disorderly dispos'd, with respect to each other; when we come to consider their long Revolutions, their stated Periods and Returns, with the exact Constancy that accompanies them in all their Vicissitudes; in short, that Harmonious Reason, which as Pliny says, only makes Nature agreeable in it self, that which before seem'd so consus'd and disorderly, will appear to be the Contrivance of Infinite Wisdom and Judgment. All Proportion amongst us is either Arithmetical, Geometrical or Harmonical, but that which GOD makes use of far transcends these, not only exceeding our Senses, but our Understanding also: what therefore to us may seem to want Proportion, yet that being compar'd with some other things which are not perceptible by our Senses, that yet are conspicuous to GOD, will appear to be establish'd with most exquisite Symmetry and Proportion.

He

and

me

abi

CO

de

me

att

ret

15 pa

Gr

an

01 fp

bo

be

E

But if an Heathen should say, that he cannot conceive himself under such infinite obligations to any obscure and unknown Deity, that he should slight and neglect those Auspicious and Eternal Deities the Heaven and Stars; and if there is any such GOD, his Goodness will not suffer him to count it criminal in Man, to return grateful Acknowledgments to those Superiour Powers, who are so great Benefactors to him, and pay them such Veneration as seem'd justly due to such good and excellent Causes. Nor would this in the least obstruct the Worship and Adoration of a more transcendent and eminent Deity, when-ever he would please to appear and manifest himself, and shower down more plenty of Benefits upon Mankind.

But they that argue thus, do like him that should attribute the whole Praise of the Melody to the Instrument, and make large Encomiums on it without any regard to the Mufician, who tuned it and made it found so harmoniously. This World may well be compar'd to this Instrument, and the Stars shining in it to the Strings; but if there were not one that did touch those Strings, and by making a true Proportion of Sharps and Flats produce melodious Sounds, Nature would either be dumb, or else her Voice very inharmonious. This Instrument also would be useless, without a Prior and more Noble Cause, to make it perform those agreeable and pleasant Sounds. him therefore the chief Honour and Veneration is to be paid; and it is the highest Indignity imaginable to offer offer any fort of inferiour Veneration to the Stars or Heaven, which doth not terminate in the Most Good and Great GOD, and directly tend to the advancement of his Glory.

Besides GOD cannot be said to be conceal'd and abscond, who evidently and openly shews and discovers himself continually in all his Works; and demonstrates himself to be the Greatest Opisioer in the most minute Animals and Insects. But here I shall be attack'd not only by the Heathers, but by some Hereticks amongst us. If the Most Good and Great GOD is the Primary Cause of all things, how comes it to pass that such directly Calamities, as Famine, Plague, War, &c. insect the World? sure the Most Good and Great GOD cannot be the Author of those dismal Devastations.

Thus without the establishing two Principles Good and Evil, it is impossible to conceive how such, not only different, but contrary Essects should proceed from the same Original Cause: wherefore they judge both these Principles worthy of Adoration, one to be kind and benign, the other not to hurt them. The Egyptians call'd this Evil Principle Typhon, Plutarch de Is. & Os. The Persians, especially the Magi, Arimanius; and Authors tell us others call'd him Vejupiter, Some Indians, particularly the Tapujans, to this day believe both Principles.

But yet according to their own Notion, this will admit of a more moderate Explication: For they do not suppose any Evil Principle that is indued with a Power equal to the Supream GOD; but in an inferiour degree, as we say, Darkness is inferiour to Light; so that the Good Principle was properly, and the Evil improperly God, as Pliny says in lib. de Is. & Of. The Persians had a Tradition amongst them, that at a certain time the Good Principle call'd Oromasdes, should S. A. Subdue Subdue Arimanius the Evil, and utterly destroy him. The Philosophers feem to incline to this Opinion, allowing no highest Degree in Evil. The Heathens thought this Evil Principle could only be appeared with bloody Sacrifices: Tee Labio, Porphyrius lib. 8. Aug. de Civ. Dei, and others; but pay'd their Adoration to the Good with Praises, Honours, and others Rites and Ceremonies that incited Mirth and Joy. This Persian Phantom of a Principle of Evil, was rais'd in the days of Christianity: St. Aug. says, they had it from Marcus Cerdo and Apelles; but others, and amongst them Vossius, fay, St. Paul hinted at this 2 Cor. 4. 4. The God of this World bath blinded the eyes of the Faithful. Christians themselves affert, that Adam after his Fall, was the Principle of all the Evil that happen'd on Earth; and that all Sin deriv'd its Original from him, having infected all Mankind with his guilt. But if they had made the Devil of this Age himself, or all his Infernal Dependants, who daily tempt and infnare us, the Causes of all the Evil that attends us, they had establish'd as weak a Principle.

Principles; one Beneficent, the other Malignant: that the Influence of some Stars was Good, others Bad; that some Demons were Friends to Mankind, and others naturally hurtful and Injurious. In answer to this: There are two sorts of Evil; of Crime and Punishment; the Evil of Punishment, as Famine, Pestilence and War, are the just the occult Judgments of GOD. When any of these besal good Men, the most Good and Great GOD doth bestow a better Life on them: but when he sends them amongst the Impious and Wicked, it is to take Vengeance of them; Death being a Reward to the one, and Punishment to the other,

inblue

As many the County in sight ball of Oremore, fixed

Ch

the

ver

hat

we

our

and fide

int

fing

Ex

ant

we

to:

thi

fw

Wit

cipi

on

w

Inc

lea

it,

lor M

to

the

my

Su

th

As to the Evil of Crime, that only proceeds from the Free-will that is congenite and implanted in every one; and which the most Good and Great GOD hath bestow'd on us as the greatest Bleffing: by it we are more diffinguish'd from the Brutes, than by our Understanding it self: but it being of so dubious and unstable a nature, and may be inclin'd to either side, it often happens that it is over-sway'd, and so slides into Evil. But still this Freedom in it felf is a Bleffing altogether Divine, and of fuch Amplitude and Excellency, that without it, 'tis impossible for us to do any thing that is good; for it could not be faid that we did fo, unless it were in our Power and Option to act contrary. The Source of this Evil is, because this most Noble Faculty of the Soul doth spontaneously fwerve and incline to what is vicious and depray'd without any restraint or compulsion.

These things being so manifestly true, there can be no reason given either for the Establishing a Principle of Evil, or the Adoration of it. Evil proceeds only from our selves, whether it be that of Crime, which slows from our own proper voluntary vicious Inclinations; or that of Punishment, which is the consequence of the former, and to worship and adore it, is to act like School boys that have been guilty of some Fault, and kiss the Rod that whipt them. When Men suffer the just Judgment of GOD; they ought to submit to it with thankfulness, as a Correction for their Advantage, and hoping that by it they shall escape more, and more heavy Punishments; but my Design will not permit me to enlarge on this Subject.

I shall leave our Divines to treat of that Principle of Evil, which is deriv'd from the Fall of Adam; for it is not very evident to an ordinary Capacity, how the Soul of Adam can be said to be made after the

Image

ne

evi

w

De

be

W

tion

tio

the

cli

lo.

wl

PI

M

th

Se

aff

fre

to

Pr

ac

A

of

m

th

la

ar

70

111

Image of GOD; if he were altogether ignorant of Good and Evil before his Fall, or committed fo hainous a Grime that was so fatal to himself and all his Posterity, by eating the Fruit of the Tree, that indued him with fuch Knowledge. For if before he had eaten thereof he was entirely ignorant of Good and Evil. how could he like the Prohibition of it, and think it just and equitable in it felf, that by these means he should perpetrate to horrid and tremendous a Crime, for which his innocent Posterity, that could not be concern'd in it, should be doom'd to eternal Punish. ments; and after so many Ages nothing could appeafe and reconcile GOD but more than Humane Sacrifice. Let the Learned Divines explain and confirm these difficult Doctrines, so that they may be clearly understood, and evidently prov'd to the Capacities of the Laity.

I affert nothing here but that this Principle of Evil cannot be deriv'd from Adam; for all our Sins and Transgressions are our own meer voluntary Acts; and no Mortal was so necessarily determin'd to do Evil, but by the Divine Goodness, he could both fee and avoid it. As for the Demons, and even the Devil himself, he ought not to be esteem'd so evil; for if he is only a publick Hangman and Executioner, he cannot be blam'd for executing the just Judgments of GOD; fo that they cannot in their own Nature be effeem'd the Principles of Evil. The antient Philosophers indeed, according to the Number and Influences of the Stars thought the Demons to be more or less Beneficent or Malevolous; placing the Power of affecting Corporeal things in them, upon which Mars. Ficinus says, They love Good Men, and have an aversion for the Wicked; and are more near and industriously concern'd in matters here below, especially humane Affairs. But these Demons have Affections, and are goveril

0

t

d

,

d

t

e

45 ıt

rs,

ne

f-

d

ned by their own Free-will, as well as Men, which is evidently apparent by the Religion of the Heathens, which instituted Rites and Sacrifices to render these Demons propitious to them; now if these Demons had been simply and effentially evil in themselves, they would not have imagin'd that any Worship or Adoration could have wrought any Change or Alteration in them. They did not indeed deny but that the Demons were of two forts, and that some did incline to do Good, others Evil; but they were not fo, confider'd fingly, but might determine themselves which way they pleas'd. Avicenna endeavours to prove, that one Demon proceeded from another, as Man from Man, or Beaft from Beaft: But to pass by those things which are above the Evidence of our Senses, of which little that is just can be said; I only affirm, that this Principle of Evil cannot be inferr'd from Demons. See Epiphan. Hær. 66. and St. August. against Faustus and the Manichai. Those that desired to know more of the Notion the Heathens had of this Principle of Evil, may confult Vessius de Idololatr.

I come now to prove, that the Supream GOD amongst the Heathens, was the same as we own and acknowledge. This is evident by the words of the Apostle, Rom. 1. 19. and in many places, in 10. Chap. of the Acts, and the 17. 28, 29. as Vossius proves by many Arguments. But the Unknown GOD amongst the Athenians, seems to quadrate with what St. Paul says concerning the GOD of the Jews, and his Will and Pleasure concerning Christ, Acts 17. 23. Whom you ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you: so Lucan;

The Uncertain GOD of the Jews.

Epimenides speaks of Altars, To the Unknown God; and in his time there were Altars at Athens, which they call'd Name-

Nameless Altars; and in all probability St. Paul faw one of them when he preach'd to the Athenians. Concerning these Altars to the Unknown God, consult Pau-Canias lib. 1. Philostra. lib. 6. Agell. lib. 2. cap. 28. The Altar that was erected by Epimenides, on account of the Pestilence, To the Proper Deity; I am sure to be quite different from the former, and intimated no more than that E. pimenides not knowing what God to facrifice to, chose this Expedient to make them all propitions. But it feems a little strained to make this Unknown God the same as the God of the Jews; that the former places or Holy Scripture may evince the God of the Heathens was the same as the Common GOD of all. It's very plain to me that this Unknown God amongst the the Athenians was quite different, and therefore they erected him an Altar, least any God amongst them should be destitute of Worship; tho' the Apostle very ingeniously took occasion from it to instruct them.

I question not but the Heathers being instructed from the Book of Nature, both acknowledg'd and worship'd the Supream GOD: for as he hath manifested himself in his Works, so is he also worship'd in them; and I hold it for an establish'd Truth, That the Gentiles being instructed by that only, formerly arriv'd to the Knowledge of the Supream GOD, and that the Indians, and the rest of the Inhabitants of the Globe at this time do the same. I should sooner donbt, Whether the Sun did enlighten the remotest parts, than that they were ignorant of the Supream GOD, he being conspicuous in all things, and the Sun shining only in its own Sphere. I shall not infift longer on this Argument, because the most Learned Men have been of this Opinion, and amongst others Bullin. de Orig. cult. Dei, cap. 8.

of the grant of the sealt of

-DIMINI

Tho'

fee

Vi

the

mi

po

OF

gi

th

to

M

R

fo

Si

6

G

to

th

L

N

1-

e

t

-

n

d

Tho' the Heathens had but very lame and imperfeet Notions of the Supream GOD, either from the Villainy or Madness of the Priests, seducing Men from the Knowledge or the true Principles, by which they might arrive at the Knowledge of GOD, grofly impoling on them and impudently boafting, that they only had the Knowledge of the Mysteries of Religion, and that there was no access to GOD but by them, and without their Affistance it was impossible to pleafe him. This brought a dark Cloud over the Minds of the Vulgar, which intercepted those bright Rays of Divinity; and involved them in fuch profound Ignorance, that they durft not flir or move a foot, unless led by the hand or directed by the Mouth of the Priest. I could be very copious on this Subject; but so many excellent Authors have gone before, especially Platonists, that I should only repeat what has been already faid.

I proceed to discourse of the Worship of the Supream GOD, under the Attributes of most Good and Great, the Refult and Conclusion being very Natural; for to whom is Reverence and Adoration to be paid rather than to the Most Great, and who is more deferving of Love than the Most Good; and what can be a more Excellent, Reasonable and Genuine Worship, than what proceeds from Reverence and Love? There is nothing remains more, when these two are but well explain'd; for when GOD is worship'd with due Reverence and in his Fear, which is justly call'd the Beginning of Wisdom; and that Supream Majesty of GOD which beholds all things here, is not offended by any Crimes, and Man goes no other ways towards Heaven but in the paths of Virtue; acknowledging himself unfit for Glory and Eternal Felicity, when he hath contaminated his Soul with Guilt; and by that means render'd himself unfit and unworthy to be admitted into the

Com-

lofopi

lian

thof

whe

Not

tion

who

one

duc

form

be 1

GO Th the

of 1

Dei

per

Th

Sa

th

the

th

C

liv

th

va

de

til odf ya b

ent's the civis

Company of the Most Good and Great GOD. But where this perfect Love of GOD is established in the Mind of Man, it will subdue all wicked and tumultuous Affections, and raise a Belief and Hope of a better Life. Upon these things it is that the whole Frame of Religion turns. But what is seriously to be lamented, Weak-brain'd Superstitions, and profane Rites and Ceremonies were coin'd in the Priests Mint, and mixt amongst the pure Bullion of Religion; for had they stood upon the former Basis, the Heathers would not have lost their Labour.

CHAP. XIV.

An Estay concerning the First Causes of Religion amongst the Heathens.

I Shall endeavour to investigate the Original Causes of Religious Worship amongst the Heathers. For that Religion which obtain'd almost every where, must be instituted for some Great and Noble End. I have therefore traced these Causes from the Schools of the Philosophers, the Writings of the Lawyers, and the Practice of the Priests themselves, as we have it handed down to us in History. When I had compared them together, digested and abridged them, I thought sit rather to publish my own Conjectures on this Subject, than that it should not be treated of. If any Person dislike what I offer, let him publish his own Sentiments.

Tho' I must lay this down for an Establish Truth, That the Religion of the Antient Heathers was not so absurd and stupid as is generally imagin'd, being receiv'd for so many Ages by the most Learned Philosophers, boophers, the Greatest and Best Magistrates and most Va liant Heroes. Tho' I shall notwithstanding discover those gross and foul Errors with which it ever where abounds. When the Heathens had receiv'd the Notion of the Attributes of the Supream GOD mertion'd before, there fprung up a Race of Crafty Prief.s. who not thinking it sufficient there should be but one GOD in all this Universe, judg'd it would conduce much to their Interest, to join and affociate some others to this Supream Deity; and that it would be no obstacle, but that the one Most Good and Great GOD should have the Pre-eminence over all others. Their Design of Introducing other Gods, drove farther: they thought they could embarais the Minds of the People more with the Notion of Plurality of Denies, than by the Worship of One only, tho' never fo Great; especially after they had invented and disperfed a different way of Worship for each of them. They also expected to reap more Profit, and have larger Stipends from the various Rites, Ceremonies and Sacred Mysteries which they contriv'd and divulg'd, than if Men of all Ages should continue to perform the same Duties of Piety and Virtue. For tho' this were the true way of Worshipping the Supream GOD, their Country was preferv'd against Enemies, the Citizens lived in Peace and Amity together; yet there was nothing in all this that did redound fo to their own Private and Particular Advantage: wherefore with wonderful Artifice they interwove Truths with Probabilities, Possibilities and Falsties, and made use of such Arguments as these to infinuate into, and prevail upon the Populace.

As nothing is more true, so it is beyond all controversy, That there is only one Supream and Eternal GOD, and being so he must be the First Cause of all things: but this is no Argument that he is solitary itary and alone; did he not from Eternity either faud or make himself some Companions in Heaven or Earth? and is he capable of no other Happines. but only a bare Contemplation of Himfelf, in which he spends not only the Ages of Mortals, but his own Eternity? These things are so unworthy to be thought of the Supream GOD, that they are very unbecoming a Woman fitting at the Looking-glaß. We must therefore rationally conclude, That he hath some that partake with him in his Bleffedneß, and that some in all Ages are receiv'd up into his Celestial Mansions; for all that is Meritorious and Praise-worthy is not already done, but still continues to be perform'd daily, and will do fo to all Eternity. There were therefore some Beings Self-existent, and produc'd by the Eternal Decree of the Supream GOD, Co-eternal with him, or Contemporary with the World. These Beings also, whose constant Residence is in Heaven, may not undeservedly be call'd GODS; I do not mean the Sun, Moon and Stars that move in Heaven; but whatfoever other things exist in the infinite Space of things, and enjoy an Eternal and Bleffed State amongst the Gods. We ought therefore to pay Adoration to those as next to the Supream GOD. Another fort of Worship is due to a Conful, a Senator, a Tribune of the People, a Questor, a Dictator, and other Magistrates, none of these will suffer those that slight or affront them to go unpunish'd; therefore we ought to endeavour to avert the least Displeasure of the Gods: which can be done no otherwise than by paying the Veneration that is due to them. It is also very improbable that he should be displeas'd with this Adoration paid to inferior Deities, in regard it ultimately terminates in the Supream GOD Himself, the Author and Maker of all Therefore these Lesser Gods or inferior Deities,

De a 1 che wit

Cha

this to

min fpe Na

it for wh ry t

and but and the dow ptib

infe ceiv

had Min as w bey

is it ther flow

1 3

Deiries, tho' they were not from Eternity, but had a Beginning, ought to be worship'd: but how much the rather if they were Self-existent and Co-eternal with the Supream GOD, which many Eminent Philosophers bring very folid Arguments to prove. If this be true, certainly extraordinary Veneration is due to them, tho' less than what is paid to the Supream Deity it felf. For they must needs have the sole Administration of some Affairs in Heaven and Earth, efeecially those things which are quite alien from the Nature of the Most Good and Great GOD, as many things in this World are. But supposing the World it felf had receiv'd its Original from them, as fome are of Opinion; this Machine seeming to be a Work unworthy of the Most Good and Great GOD: where the Men are flagitious and indigent of every thing; other Animals are Brutes and Miserable. the Heaven it felf in extreams and immoderate: and the best of Men value nothing that is above but in hopes of Reward, nor below but for Profit and Advantage: for what cold Conceptions would they have of the Deities, did they not daily shower down their Bleffings upon them, and how contemptibly would they look on all Animals, if they were not subservient to them? Therefore whether these inferior Deities are Self-existent, and the World receiv'd its Original from them; and every one of them hath his peculiar Province: or whether they had their Being from the Supream GOD, and are the Ministers of his Will and Pleasure, or whether they. as well as Men, act in this World as they pleafe, it's beyond all doubt that they should have some Rites. and Devotion paid unto them. How small a matter is it to pay some small Veneration to them, to render them propitious, upon which they-immediately below their Favours on you; or from whom when

1

ft

)-

ld

100

all

or es,

Cha

4 80 V

4 11

Ct

S et

Si Si

65 g

SIE

4 2

1 te

f th

6 0

6.6

s el

Sin

S PE

6 2

C

112

· H

" af

L

T

PO A

KV

CH

ON

Bug

t th

incensed you have just reason to sear the effect of their Displeasure: for you entertain very mean Thoughts of the Most Good and Great GOD, if you suppose you can ever worship him sufficiently, either in Himself, his Works, or whatsoever exists in the Universe.

When the most part of Men had imbib'd these empty Notions and Opinions, they little regarded what was true, probable, pollible or false, but had an implicite Faith for what their Guides the Priests told them, and by degrees, gave themselves entirely up to them. That Maxim of Eternal Truth, did not obtain amongst them, That all Deities are Ador'd in the Supream God; but enquired of their Priest who those Deities were, and how they ought to Worship them; for, they would not be fo ungrateful to receive Favours from them, and not return them due acknowledgments, if the Priests would but inform them how it was to be done. In the whole, it was very evident to them, that all Good did proceed from Heaven, but from what Deity, Star, Power or Influence, or by the Co-operation of what Causes, they were entirely ignorant, unless they were inform'd: This gave the Priests a fine opportunity, who generally manag'd them at this rate,

It is very difficult for us to inform you what those Deities are, you are so desirous of knowing; for they not only transcend our Senses, but our Understanding also; they are not under such conditions of Matter, as those Objects that are perceived by us, but are a Substance of a Nature quite different from ours; nor is it more easie to determine any thing about their Worship; nothing certain, having been yet revealed to Mankind in general. It is Universally acknowledged, that there is a Supream God, and Inferiour Gods, or Dansons mons alfo. How ridiculous would it be, to imagine that the Earth only was Inhabited, and the valt compals of the Air, Ether, Celestial Orbs, and those immense Spaces above them should be destiture of Inhabitants. The most Learned amongst the Philosophers divided these into three forts Supercelestial, Celestial, and Subcelestial; the Supercelefial were those most remote from us, who were folicitous about nothing but what was requifice and convenient for their Nature, and so enjoy'd an happy State with the Supreum God; nor had they any fuch regard for Humane Affairs, to spare the least Moment from their Celestial Solace, to concern themselves about them; nor was there any occasion they should intermeddle in Humane Affairs. because the Supream God, from all Eternity, had establish'd Orders and Laws concerning all things in the Heaven, Stars, Elements, and the whole Nature of things. Some of thefe Laws were, That 'all things here should be subject to a perpetual Viciffitude. That whatever receiv'dits beginning here, fafter a stated Time, should have an end also : But that notwithstanding, all things should endeavour fafter their own preservation. That the Goods of this 'Life should be the effect of Labour and Industry: That Conscience it felf should tell us, some Actions were good, others bad. That amongst good Actions, the strict Worship of God, and Moral Virtues were the Principal; amongst Evil, that Irreligion and Vice were the most heinous. That Men might use their own free Will, and if they did apply proper means, they would always attain the defired end. That all things should affect their own like I if Men were Good and Virtuous, they should be rewarded, both here and hereaster; if Wicked and Vicious, Punished. By the Permission

S

n

e

is

it

11,

1-

r-

te

1-ıg

in

at 1715

Cha

4 th

E2

"fit

R

' ni

coth

· M

15 s is

"at tic

'ch

ca

W

· W

pr

m

te

, 38

C

· fi

'ti

· 15

N

· a!

W

it

n

0 on of the Supream God the Celestial Deities had the chief Power over these Laws, and many more that are established in the Nature of things, and too tedious to infert; fo that a kind of Fate, or Order should be observed in the World, and manifested in them, lest Mortals should be ignorant of the next Causes of things from whence they received so many Benefits. That the Supream God kept himfelf and the other Supercelestial Deities from the Eyes of Mortals, because they were of fuch sublime Natures, that it was impossible to behold them; and in their stead, had produc'd their Celestial Deities, both for Sight and Fruition, which we call the Heaven, Sun, Moon, fix'd Stars and Planets. In thefe the Supream God shews us the Country we formerly Inhabited, for our most Noble part could proceed only from the Heaven and Stars; out Mind being above all Elementary Composition, had a more Noble Original; and unless our Crimes prevent it, must again return to them. Men, who have behaved themselves well in this Life, shall have Habitations provided for them there, and be supplied with all things pleasant and convenient for them, as they had in this World, but after a far more exquisite and delicious manner. Nor will it be any Argument against their being Deities, because they have thick and solid Bodies, for they are actuated by a Divine Mind, wich moves their immense Bodies with prodigious Velocity, or that their Bodies feem circular and round, as if it were beneath the august Majesty of the Gods, to appear in so plain a Form; for the more Parts and Members any Body is compos'd of, the more weak and debile is it, and obnoxious to many Accidents and Injuries, and requires the helpand assistance of another: This is evident from the the Fabrick of Man's Body, confifting of many Languid and Infirm Members; and would not be "fit for Civil Society, or able to provide Food and Raiment for it felf, unless the Supream God had fur-'nish'd it with Hands, and the Organs of Speech to that end. Nor will it fignifie any thing, whether the " Motion of these Celestial Deities and the Heaven it felf, is spontaneous or necessary; if the former (which is reasonable to believe of the Planets) we ought at least to acknowledge them to be inferiour Deihies; if the latter, they are to be reverenc'd as the 'chief Ministers of the Supream Deity; but nothing can be more certain in fo dubious a Matter, than Wthat, hether they are guided by their own free Will, or are govern'd by the Pleasure of the Supreum God; it is evident, they preside over, and manage our Affairs, and are at least worthy of External Adoration. The Subcelestial Deities are inferiour to the Celestial, but nearer to us, and more agreeable and like us in their Nature; being Clothed with Airy and Etherial Bodies, and confin'd almost within such limits as we are; sometimes good, fometimes bad, (for to be simply bad, is repugnant to the Divine Nature, it being a Maxim, that there is no highest degree in Evil) and fo being of a dubious Nature, ought to be made propitious to us, for there is no Person but will endeavour as much to divert an impending Evil from him, as to procure him a present Good; it's beyond dispute, that those Gods or Demons are. more beneficial to Men, than Men are to Animals, or the Beafts to Men; for they are not only endued with excellent Intellects, but with Strength, Agility, and other Noble Qualifications. Thus, if like Men they use their free Will, to do Milchief when occasion is given; what Havoke sion. might 9.

7

n

d

t,

12

19

id

d,

115

nd

of

he

'd

us

he

m

he

a might they make amongst Mankind, and all things compos'd of the Elements, far beyond what we , are able to do amongst the Brutes, especially if it be to punish the Wicked; they may punish Man-, kind with as much Reason as Men destroy nocent Animals; nay rather, because Men are capable of doing more Mischief than any Brutes, for they very often kill and destroy those Animals that de-. ferve best of them. It's very absurd for any wicked impious Person, to think himself secure in the e midst of his Villainies, and not to be continually . under the dismal Apprehension of some one or other, that will speedily take Vengeance on him. There were some amongst the Gods or Demons above-mention'd, simply and in their own Nature good, and others bad; tho' it was not fo well establish'd, that they were guided by a Freedom of Will, and as occasion required, could incline to either fide. For if any of the Gods were entirely Evil, it would be in vain to attempt to pleafe them; but daily Experience proves the contrary. From this Class of Gods, it's apparent, that the Supream God hath given the Supercelestial Power to manage all things happily in all Ages. The Celestial Gods to preside over Humane Assairs, and to deliver them Laws and Eternal Covenants, and that they only are visible to us, as those that govern all things in this Sublunary World, unless, where Man's free Will obtains, and especially in those things which are undertaken, according to the Dictates of right Reason. Lastly, there were these Subcelestial Gods, that were somestimes Propitious and Benign, and fometimes Injurious and Hurtful, that the Authority of Divine Justice and Mercy might appear: This will be more evident, if we consider the Celeftial Kingdom,

1

t

I

dom, either as an Aristocracy, Oligarchy, or Democracy. For where is there any Form of Government effablish'd, by which all things in Heaven and Earth are managed? Or who can demonstrate, what is the proper Office of each? Why fome should be better and more excellent than others? The most disparate and disagreeable parts of Nature may be united together, but if there were feveral Deities of equal Power, there would be ftrange Disorders and Convulsions in Nature, whilst every one studied to advance his own Interest; and nothing exists to unite and reconcile the contrary repugnant Parts of the World. We do therefore again conclude, that there is one Supream God, who was Bleffed from all Eternity, but he did also adopt fome other happy Natures to keep him company, and made them Partakers of his Felicity, and that he can advance others into that Supercelestial Society, and make them participate of all Good things ; upon which account it is incongruous and irrational, to suppose that God is either Sedentary, Wandring alone, or Affix'd to the Celestial Orb, continually turning it about, and therewith folacing himself; or that he was the Maker of the World; unless he had deliver'd fome Laws, by which it was to be Govern'd from its beginning. There is none Builds a City, but establishes Laws in it; for no People can be Govern'd without them; nor has God any occasion to change his Laws, as the Exigency of time requires, because he knew the end and event of all things from the beginning. It is ridiculous to imagine God has a recourse to new and fresh Measures, or that he establish'd all things from all Eternity arbitrarily, and will not recede from them upon any account whatfoever-Therefore when God had form'd this World out of the

-

0

d

5,

y

r.

en-

ne be

gm,

the Chaos, he establish'd some Laws, by which it should be Govern'd; but more especially, that his Felicity might not be interrupted, and he disturb'd every Day by things of little moment, and so confume Ages in trifles. It would also be very troublesome to him, to endeavour to reconcile the different and opposite Supplications of Mortals : particularly fome, who, the' they were Good and Pious, yet might defire something of the Divine Majesty, which would be too Injurious and Prejudicial to others as Pious as themselves. It will therefore be more agreeable to suppose, that all things which are lawful to be requested, were Decreed from all Eternity; upon the using regular Means, as fervent and devout Prayers and Supplications, Faith, Virtue, &c. and if things did not Succeed according to their expectation; they must conclude, that it was Decreed so from from all Eternity, as much as if they had obtain'd their Defire. What more could any one defire of the Supream God, than that after he had led a good Life here, he might be made happy hereafter; or what doth it fignifie, whether he receives it from the Eternal Decree of God, or it be the reward of his daily Prayers? The Supream God will be equally Worship'd and Ador'd, if from all Eternity he made a Connexion between the Means and the End, as if he began now to do fo; in short, without this or some such Order was establish'd amongst things, it is not possible to conceive how the Supream God should be free from loads of Care and Molestations. It was said very justly by the Antients, that was only Eternal and Bleffed that had no Business to do, nor requir dany other to do it for him. I come now to treat of that Worship which is to be paid those Gods in particular,

n

fi

fi

n

W

n

u

A

cular, for I have before shewn, that the Supream God was to be Worshipped with a pure Mind, not only free from Vice, but Ador'd with all manner of Virtue, as Faith, Hope and Love, and with Prayers and Thanfgiving. The Celeftial Gods are to be Worshipped in Honour of the Supream God only: But, that their Worship might not feem Bare and Naked; it was judg'd requisite to add fome Rites and Geremonies; as bowing the Body, kiffing the Finger or Hand, turning round from East to West, or to the contrary, to demonstrate his Universality, and such-like, that we openly declare we Worship and Adore them next after the Supream God. Then fome grateful Perfumes, or their own proper, or lymbolical Animals, as an Horse to the Sun, a Cow to the Moon. &c. are to be offer'd up to them. It's very requifite to procure the Subcelestial Gods to be propitious, because being uncertain in their Nature; they incline fometimes one way, fometimes another, for Causes that we were altogether ignorant of. The best way is, to offer up something pleasing and grateful to them. What this was must be discover'd from their corporal Natures, which being supposed to be composed of Air and Ether; some Good things ought to be prepar'd for them out of the gross Elements, reduc'd to a more subtil Substance (for they want Nutriment, and by this means their Elementary Nature is refresh'd by cognate Elements) and in regard, they are pleafed with the fmell of Fat; the Animals pleafant and agreeable to their Tafte and Smell should be Sacrificed to them. For some fine Spirits that are made in the Liver, Heart, and Brain, did afcend upwards, and therefore were the Objects of Adoration. It is beyond dispute, that every thing loves

t

9

-

15

n

2-

1-

m ry

id

ny

at

ti-

ir,

loves its like. They would be always very ready to inform Men, what Sacrifices were agreeable to each God or Demon; and amongst others things which they learn'd from the Gods, themselves, if the People we deficient on their part, and by this means they amassed vast Treasure.

Here you may have most noble Truths, but mixt with many Verifimilitudes, and some Improbabilities and Falshoods (concerning which I shall declare my Sentiments hereafter) these the Priests dispers'd amongst the Vulgar (who are always more ready to believe, than to controvert fuch Matters) which they Universally received, and were easily imposed on. As there was some that endeavour'd to confirm what was reported of these Subcelestial Deities by occult Magick; fo there were some of the Learned, who made a doubtful Construction of what was deliver'd by them; for they durst not deny what the Priest deliver'd (who were continually near the Gods and their Oracles). They knew that nothing was necessary here, but the denying of Falsities, and raising Doubts, concerning Verisimilitudes and Conjectures. The People at last, not being satisfied with these things, ask'd their Priests what their Opinion was of the Elements, and all things compos'd of Elementary Matter, but especially of Famous Men, whether any Adoration ought to be be paid them? Which some of the Antient Priests did Answer after this manner.

We positively assert, that a particular Worship is due to the Elements, tho they are the lowest and and most obscure parts of the World; yet the Universe would not be finish'd and entire without them, or that Image of the Supream God which shines in all his Works, be perfect and compleat. They therefore that Worship the Superiour World, and neglect the Inferiour, are as equally abfurd, as if they should respect the Head and Neck of any Person. and despile and contemn his other Members, the never so fine, agreeable, and full of proportion and Symmetry. Let us here confult our Orphem, who describes the Supream God (by him called Jupiter) thus. The Heaven Adorn'd with the glittering Stars, was his Head and Hair; out of which came two Golden Horns, one the East, the other the West; the Sun and Moon his Eyes; his Breast the Air; the Wind his Wings; his Belly the Earth; encompass'd by the Ocean; his other Members were about the Centre of the Earth. It is not to be suppos'd that Orphens would be understood. that these were the individual Members of the Supream God, but that the reprefenting him by this external Form, would create a good Idea of him: But to keep more close, we fay the Elements consider'd in themselves, are worthy of some Inferiour degree of Worship. All Animals consist of an Elementary Nature, and there is nothing that is visible in their Fabrick, but what is deriv'd from thence, and is ultimately refolv'd into it again ; wherefore we should not pass it by without some Veneration, as being the material Principle and ultimate End of things; nor will it be any Objection, that the Soul, which is of a Celeftial Original, claims the Precedency; for, if the Humane Body, that is so conjunct and near to it, and for the Majesty of its Figure, excites a fort of Reverence in us; how much more will be due to the Elements, who furnish all things with Matter and Magnitude, and according to fome, with the Vegetative and Sensitive Soul? If this be true, and that Vegetation and Motion, which is a Species of Vegetation and Sense, and Sensation depends on the Temperature of the Elements, why do we make fuch nice Enquiries into the Caufes of those things that are common to us with the other Animals, and not pay fome Adoration to those Elements, from whom we receive fo many Benefits; especially, that they should not be Injurious to us? Therefore, the Air which we constantly draw in, and breath out in a Reciprocal Motion. and supports and renews our Life, ought to be Worshipped; for if it be Infectious, or too thin. or too gross, or any otherwise, so that it cannot be attracted by the Lungs, Man would immediately expire. Water also deserves Adoration as well as the Air, because it affords us that Moisture. without which our Bodies would foon crumble into dry and shapeless Dust; for if it be too Cold, like the Stygian Waters, or too Hot, as some Baths, or contract a Poylonous Tincture, by running thro' some Metallick Pores of the Earth, Death is the immediate consequence of it. The Earth alfo should be Worship'd, because it affords Firmness and Solidity to Humane Bodies, and without it the whole Fabrick would be diffolv'd; it also carries Man as it were upon its Shoulders, by its interpolition, preserving Mankind from that vast Precipice that is between his Feet and the Centre, affording all, both Food and Raiment, like a common Mother and Nurse; and if its Caverns are open'd by any preternatural Commotions, and it fend forth any pestiferious Vapours, or emit Water out of its Bowels, which destroy whole Cities and Provinces, or doth not make a plentiful return of the Seeds fown in it, Pestilence, Deluge, Famine and Universal Desolation will be the consequence; Fire likewise, which is kindled out of the sulphureous Veins of the Earth, or that the

the concussion of the Clouds, striking of Stones together, rubbing of Wood hard, or proceeding from fome Oily Substance, immediately appearing bright and shining, surprises, like some unexpected Deity; and by reason of its Heat, is so Powerful and Efficacious in all Natural Generation, that it feems to be the Form and Soul of the other Elements. If it grow too predominant, it Burns up every thing, threatning Destruction to the whole World; wherefore it ought to be had in Veneration beyond all other Sublunary things. If it should be objected, that the Element are not Spontaneous, but necessary Agents, tho' it is very probable they act both ways; and should it be allowed, that Fire, by a certain Fate, or an Ingenite Nature, always afcends upwards; yet it will turn Obliquely towards it proper Fuel, and exercises the same Freedom as the Animals that Feed here do. The Air also Blows where it lifteth: The Water of some Springs, but especially the Ocean, ebbs and flows with reciprocal Motion, and swells, and rifes up to avoid a Vacuum. If the Earth move round by its own Internal Power, (as some are of Opinion) yet it hath many other Motions, or else it will be impossible to solve the Phenomena's. Thus, tho one Motion may proceed from a natural Necessity, yet this doth not in the least hinder; but there may be other Motions that are Spontaneous: For the' the Motion of the Heart in us is natural and necessary, for when it ceases, we at the same instant cease to Live; but the Motion of our Eyes, notwithstanding, is voluntary, being directed only by the dictates of a free Soul, moving any way, according to its pleasure: I might also here mention the Internal actions of the Soul: Now as both these Motions are in Animals, why should fhould they be denied the Elements, for the' their Motion in some respect may seem to be necessary and compultive, yet, in others it is free and voluntary but granting that the Elements move by a meet natural Necessity, they are the Ministers of the Supresm God, the parts of which the World is composed, and the Authors of all corporeal Nature; therefore some Veneration is due unto them.

The whole Mass of the World is so contrived, that whoever goes but out of Doors, cannot observe any remarkable Parts of it, without reverent and awful thoughts; therefore let us enter into an enquiry concerning those things that are composed of the Elements, but chiefly Man, and fee whether fome Animals, especially, very Famous Men, ought not to have some particular Worship paid to them. For as there are many Ranks and Degrees of Things, fo there must be of Worship, as is most fluitable and congruous to each; fo that there is nothing within the compass of this World, but in some degree is the object of Worship, or in some measure or other appertains to the Worship of the Deities; as Bread-Corn, Wine, Milk, some Herbs and Animals that are grateful to them. Man, next after the Elements, is here to be treated of, being of a middle Nature, between Eternal and Caducous things; for the World could not subsist without the Elements, but its possible it might without Man; f nay, it is most probable, that the Earth would be f much more Fruitful and Pleasant; if the multif tude of Mens Villainies did not bring down Dif vine Vengeance on all Sublunary things. But, because a Wicked Man is the worst of all Animals, therefore a Good and Pious Man is far the best; that the Supercelestial Deities are good, proceeds from their own proper Nature, but that Man is fo from from his own free Will; and tho' they have a propenfity to Evil, yet by Virtue and Piety they advance themselves to the Nature of the Immortal. and obtain Eternal Rewards; and if Man could but be exactly conformable to the Rules of Piery and Probity (which never will be) he would be the most happy amongst the Blessed, next to the Supream God; in regard what others had by chance, and Fate would be the just reward of his Merit. Now, forafmuch as we doom the Wicked to an Eternal state of Misery; so it is but just that the Good should be rewarded with Eternal Happiness. and therefore be Worship'd and Ador'd. When they are advanc'd into Heaven, the Supream God makes them Judges and Disposers of Mens Actions, in which they are Govern'd, partly by Laws promulgated from the beginning of the World, or written in the Heart; partly from the Good or Evil Inclination of Man's Will, and his very Thoughts themselves; for it is ridiculous to imagine, that those who have obtain'd Heaven, do deposite any of these Faculties their Soul exercised whilst they lived here, or are depriv'd of them, or are either so idle or ignorant of our Affairs here, or fo useless to these Parts of the World, that they should not manage all Humane Affairs. It is very equitable to make one Man Judge of another, who contemplating our Actions from above, may bring them to the Test of common Reason and Conscience: For if the Supream God had committed this Charge to the Celehial Deities, they would have determin'd all things by the Eternal Laws of Heaven, and the Rigour of Pate; they would have been very little folicitous what influence the Will of Man had in all his Actions. And if God himfelf should take cognizance of Humane Affairs, it is not to be imagin'd that he

· 6

" (

I

n

L

f

e

E

'h

he could lead a Bleffed Life, free from all Perturbation. This Province therefore, from the beginning was given to Men, admitted into Heaven, who deliberate and judge what is best and right in Mens Actions, and what depray'd and vitious, by those Laws which are written in the Eternal Tables of the Heaven and Stars, and the Universal confent of all Mankind; allotting them Rewards or Punishments after this Life, according as they deferv'd; and there is no doubt but the Supream God will ratifie and confirm their just Determinations. But if the Supream God should referve some for his own Judgment, (for he is not fo strictly oblig'd by his own Laws, but that at pleasure he can exempt himself from them): These will be Mediators between him and Mortals, and intercede for them : and upon this account, they ought to be made propitious, if not as Judges, yet as Patrons. Who those are, is best known by the Piety and Probity of their Lives; their Heroick Actions, or some Noble Invention, which has been very Beneficial to Mankind, such as these, are our Judges or Patrons; especially, if Mortal Men, being a constitutive part of this common City of the World, have any Suffrages in Heaven; which appears very rational, in regard, in every well-establish'd Commonwealth; the Commonalty have some Authority as well as the Grandees, wherefore their Laws are called Plebiscita. Thus Mankind supplies the Place of the Plebeity in this City of the World, when they raise their Herses to Heaven. But as the People only, and not the Patricians, were oblig'd by the Plebiscita; so perhaps it may happen, that if the Plebs, or Mankind, should ask something with respect to the Celestial Kingdom, which may be unjust, and not fir to be granted, and the Gods reject it, as being more competent Judges, therefore thefe earnest Petitions of the Plebs, or Mankind, are not fuch certain demonstrations of Mens being advanced into the number of the Gods, unless they have been very exemplary for Piety and Virtue; which Opinions are no less Beneficial and Profitable. than true and undubitable. For what is it, that Men will not attempt and perform to be made Partakers of a Celestial Life, where there is an Affluence of whatfoever is defireable; fo that this Doctrine doth afford the most poinant Reasons for the Pradice of Virtue, and the declining Vice. Thefe Deities being thus establish'd in Heaven, ought both to be Pray'd and Sacrific'd to; but yet, fo that no more than a kind of Worship belonging to Heroes, ought to be paid to fome of them. Now thefe Deities (by the Permission of the Supream God) having the Management of Humane Affairs; I shall shew what Order and Degrees there are in that Celestial Kingdom, (for they have not all an equal Authority) and who is chief amongst them, and who are appointed the Judges of things here below. Under the Supream God, they have the Direction and Management of all our Affairs; but in regard (as was faid before) they are oblig'd by Eternal Laws; it is impossible for them to recede from them: Proffrate before them, therefore we ought to make our folemn Vows, for they not only know our Good and Evil Actions, but are Privy to the fecret Thoughts of our Hearts, for if they were ignorant of these, there could be no Scrutiny made into the Arcana's of Conscience, or any exact Rule to make a just judgment of Mens Actions. We Mortals can only judge of Externals, and those Deities of Internals; upon which account, various and different Worship ought to be paid unto them. We will declare unto you, all their particular and distinct Degrees, and peculiar Rites, from the in-most Secrets of Nature. and their own Oracles; if you'll but confider ferioully of what we have already delivered, and affift us in the carrying on this Pious and Neceffary Work, which is your most indispensible Duty.

When by fuch specious Discourses as these, which had neither Solidity nor Truth in them; the Priests had compiled a System of Theology, and establish'd it so from their own Principles, that nothing in those times did appear more with the face of Truth, or feem'd more Orthodox, and the People durft not doubt or hefitate concerning any thing which was told them came from the fecret Counfels of the Gods themselves; so that by degrees, the Priests manag'd all things as they pleas'd, unanimously agreeing to impose on the People, by pretending to the keeping of Divine Oracles, and an Intercourse between them and Jupiter, (for so the Heathens called the Supream God in the Celestial Kingdom') and receiving Answers from him, by that firmly binding the Populace in their blind Obedience. They brought Matters to that height, that tho' their Tenents were very questionable, and their Oracular Answers prov'd eventually false, yet it was esteem'd most notoriously Impious, so much as to seem to doubt of their Truth, or to make any other interpretation of them, than what they had given them: But the Priefts did not stop here, for having discarded the most solid Parts of their own Religion, they debauch'd the Minds of Men with most tremendous Rites and Ceremonies, offering up Humane Sacrifices to their Gods; until that Custom was at last abolish'd by the Romans and other Nations.

Still

fuc

put

for

Inv

Rite alfo

Dre

but dam

Supr

whi

negl

now

thou

whi

Not

whe

radio

tho'

Were

to m

were

ther

extra

enco

thens

quite certa and f

to ut

them

expo

T

T

Still notwithstanding the pure Worship of the Supream God was made to confift of no other Sacrifices, but fuch as they devour'd; Prayers, but fuch only as were put up by them; Sacred Mysteries, but to be performed by them alone; Oracles but of their own. Invention; Auguries, but they must expound them; Rites and Ceremonies, which were contrived by them alfo : Feafts and Games, of their own Institution, and Dreams in their Temples, which none did intepret but themselves. Thus the most Certain and Fundamental Articles of Divine Religion, as Faith in the Supream God, a firm and folid Hope in him, and Love which unites Man with GOD, were either totally neglected, or at least postponed. I shall therefore now endeavour to shew what the Heathens formerly thought of those most Noble Faculties of the Soul, which are fo intimately united to it; and what their Notion of Virtue was, and the Purgation of the Soul when it had erred from it.

The Priests always strenuously endeavour'd to endicate or stiffe these Principles in the Minds of Men, tho' they themselves sufficiently knew them, and were convinc'd of their Truth: It will be therefore to my present purpose to prove, That these Tenents were not unknown to the antient Heathens; and whether you look into their Religion, or Laws, you'll find extraordinary means contain'd in them, to incite and encourage Men to Virtue, and deter them from Vice.

0

e

l-

1-

y

ear

to

e-

ed

ey

ous ifi-

laft

till

The Fathers of the Church, who were the Heathers most inveterate Enemies, represent the Matter quite otherwise than it is; for they pass by the more certain and Orthodox part of their Religion in silence, and from their Superstitions and Rites, take an occasion to utter severe Investives against them, and represent them after a most ridiculous manner, by ingeniously exposing their mad Sacred Rites; for what the Priests did as if they were in a Rapture and inspir'd with a Divine Spirit, they represented it as the effects of Lunacy and Distraction. They mention nothing of what the Heathens taught concerning Piety, Faith, Hope, and Mutual Love; tho' they knew very well that these were the Gods and Goddesses (as they were call'd) they had in such Veneration: but the Orators, in those Ages, never introduc'd any thing but what was to the manifest Detriment of their Adversaries; and might at the same time level the way for the establishing Christianity.

U 2

ge

to

be fu

de

th

di

th

tr

di

Vi

bu

D

th

th

tr

tic

F

te

m

W

V

th

lit

sh

it

Si

ly

A

P

th

h

be

For this Reason I have thought fit candidly to exhibite, not only what is evil and absurd in their Religion, but what is good also, that we may see how far and in what it agrees with ours. And here whilst I am collecting some of the Sound, most Antient and Universal Parts of Religion, out of the vast heap of their Superstitious Rubbish; I shall act like those who when the Harvest is ripe, reap many Handfuls of Darnel, Brambles, Weeds, Thistles and Burs (which Pliny calls the Diseases of the Corn) for one or two Ears of Wheat: there are so sew things in their Religious Worship that appear Just and Rational.

I shall not here insert all that may be said on this Subject; for if I should treat of the Worship and Advation that was paid to so many several Gods and Goddesses, a vast Volume would scarce contain it. I shall leave this Work for the Learned, who have leisure, especially in regard no Author (as I know of) yet hath written entirely on this Subject. Tho Guil. Choul a Noble Frenchman hath a Book with such a Title, yet he hardly touch'd upon the thing it self. Many have both designedly and transsently treated of the Genealogy and History of Heroes, worshipp'd by the Heathens; but none that I know of have reduc'd their rude Mais of Religion into Order and Method, or digested

e

V

N

ft

d

of ls

h

0

15

0-

nd

it.

re

W

01 lf.

of

ne

gested it into a Body. I have formerly made some Essay towards it, but being now Sixty Years old, and involv'd in the Care and Affairs of the World, I desire to be excused if I leave it to some that have more leisure; it will be sufficient to my purpose if I shew the deceitful Tricks of the Priests, and the main scope they aim'd at, in forging their Doctrines: for they did not only abuse and impose upon the People by their Rites and Ceremonies, but seduced them from the true Worship of the Deity, for sear Men should soon discover there was no such great occasion for them.

They did not preach up the ferious Practice of Virtue, nor Sorrow or Repentance for Sin to the People: but perswaded them to an entire belief of the Oracles. Dreams and Revelations, which every Day and Night they dreamed and invented to impose upon their Credulity. These Oracles, Dreams and Revelations, they still made more unintelligible, obscure and intricate, by their abfurd and incoherent Interpretations, that the People might rely altogether on their Fantastick Commentaries; and Common Experience tells us, That they gave those the Characters of the most profound Theologists, and intimately acquainted with the Divine Mysteries, whom they had most perverted from the Rules of right Reason: but whether this was to be attributed most to the stupid Credulity of the People, or the Villainy of the Priests, I shall not prefently determine; tho' at the same time it will not appear strange, that there was so much Superstition and Juggling doings of the Priests, formerly introduc'd into Religion, when they produc'd the Authority of a God for them. So they that give a Peafant some base Metal, or perhaps Leather with the Image of an Emperour stampt on it, and tell him he must take it for what is bought of him, he will be afraid to refuse it, because of the Emperour's Edict. Thus Thus when the Priests had invented some New Rites, or set up Oracles, they always pretended they were instituted by the Authority and Command of Jupiter, or some other Deity; and the poor wretched Populace had neither Courage nor Will to suspect them of being adulterate, and reject them as such.

But the Sober and Judicious part of Mankind esteem'd all things of this nature, meer Humane Inventions; and sometimes they desir'd that they might be admitted into these more Holy and Secret Recesses of their Temples, and be Ear-witnesses of those things which proceeded from the Mouths of their Gods; for the Priess's only being there, was but a single Evidence, which would be much corroborated by the Accession of another; and promis'd that they would be entirely devoted to the Priess and their Dostrines, if this Satisfaction were but permitted them.

But this was only defign'd to ridicule them; for they did not in the least suppose that God spoke with an Articulate Voice, or deliver'd his Commands or Inspirations in a soft Whisper. Yet the most penetrating and discerning Men did in some measure submit to the Religious Worship perform'd in their time; least the Lewd and Debauchees following their Example, and not being able to distinguish Truth from those false Appearances that were complicated with it, should utterly reject and contemn all manner of Religious Worship. Wise and Good Men in former Ages were content, if they could extract any good Juice from those Sapless parts of Religion; it was this Noble Spirit that they only were desirous of, thereby worshipping the Supream GOD; as for what the Priests impos'd, they either tacitely rejected, or left them as dubious and indifferent: but if at any time the Priests proceeded further, and requir'd them

to

at

P

tł

0 tl

il

И

o declare their Affent and Confent to their Doctrines and Precepts, that was done by the Authority of the whole Priesthood; and then they paid Obedience to the Pontifex Maximus or Chief Priest, and all the College.

But to make yet more clear what Notions the Antients had of Religions Worship, I shall follow Vossius, and divide all Worship into Proper, Symbolical and Mixt. Proper Worship is, the Adoration of the Supream GOD, the Sun, Moon, Heaven, or the whole World; particularly and respectively in themselves: Symbolical, is the Worshipping the Supream GOD in the Sun, Heaven or World; or in the Active Principle of Generation, as in the Sun or Heaven; or Passive, as in the Moon and Elements. The Mixt, which is Subordinate to the others, is, when the Supream GOD is worshipp'd in the Sun; the Sun in Fire, or Hercules; Fire in Flame, or a Burning-coal; and Hercules in his Statue or Es-figies.

It is most evident the Antients held this Proper Worship was only due to the Supream GOD. For no Wife Man could conceive the Sun it felf, which is but a part of this World, and naturally would burn and reduce it to ashes, was the Supream GOD: Or that any Worship might be said to belong to him so properly, that it terminated there only, and had not reference to fomething beyond it. Whoever contemplates the Universe, which is compos'd of fuch contrary and difagreeable Parts, must conclude that it was at first made, and is now govern'd by ONE. and therefore not pay Proper Worship to it, but must have respect to something more Superior and Happy, and only Self-acting by the internal Power of his Mind. I do not conceive that they were made the Primary and Principal Objects of Adoration; for as they did exist, and were no Deities, they stood in need of another. The Miserable were always breathing after a Superior and more happy State than they could attain to, either by Fate or Industry; and they thought that perfect and compleat Happiness was only to be found in the Eternal and Bleffed GOD, and by being admitted into his Society. They earnestly endeavour'd to render themselves like that GOD by Piety and Virtue, that they might be fit for those Eternal Fruitions. Therefore whether we judge of Mankind by our felves, or the common Sentiments of others, we shall conclude, that the Heathers paid Symbolical and Mixt Adoration to many others; but Proper only to the Supream GOD. Tho' it is true that the Priests did excogitate many incongruous Rites and Ceremonies to establish a Worship of the Deity, yet their mainDefign was to awaken the Minds of Men; that being often accustomed to these Religious Duties, they might be animated with something Divine. Some of their Sacrifices indeed were fo horribly tremendous and cruel, that for the most part they rais'd Terror and Detestation in the Spectators; yet they were very ferviceable to possess the Criminal with a dreadful Apprehension of Divine Vengeance, when the enraged Deity was represented to them by their own Priests not to be appeared without Bloody, and those sometimes Humane, Victims.

I intend, if God Almighty afford me Life and Strength, to treat more at large of this most antient Opinion which hath possessed the Minds of Men much longer than those Rites and Customs, which for the most part are either antiquated or abolished. I now proceed to the more Orthodox Doctrines of the Heathen, which also were defiled and contaminated with Rites and Geremonies.

CHAP.

Thip

diff

was firn

God

afte

fto

jeć

the

mi

wi

tue

Ri

The

pr

W

th

li

th

F

W

cl.

CHAP. XV.

Of the most Sound parts of the Religion of the Heathens.

Many Reverend and Learned Divines of this present Age do affert that the Heathens worshipped the same Supream GOD as we do. But the difference was that the Adoration they paid unto him was Erroneous and Idolatrous; and they also affirm that it is equally as finful to worship the true God after a false Manner as to worship a false God after the true Manner. This is not to be underflood that they were of Opinion the Heathens rejected the Mind, Virtue, Faith, Piety, and the other parts of true Religion: But that they intermixed Superstitious, Prophane, Barbarous Rites with them. Nor did they ever deny but that Virtue, Faith, Hope and Love were in themselves the Rule of worshiping God. I shall therefore here shew what Parts of true Religion obtained amongst the Heathens, that fo things may appear in their proper Light.

Cicero, in his fecond Book de legibus, gives us an Abftract of the Religion of the Antients, which is very well worth explaining, for in it we have what were the Sentiments of the Heathens about Matters of Religion; he there fays, Men have no other Means to carry them to Heaven but the Mind, Virtue, Piety and Faith For although he esteemed those Men deserved to be Worshipped, whose Merits had advanced them to Heaven; amongst whom he names Hercules, Bacchus, Asculapius, &c. yet they never imagined

Pe

Te

Do

to

for

he

WE

25

of

De

по

the

of

the

th

fti

the

fhi

W

ph

for

th

fo

she

de

the

th

an fh:

10 that they ever obtained Heaven themselves by such a sort of Worship, but by a pure Mind, all Virtues, and that Pietr, which sometimes is the Foundation of all Virtues (and sometimes also just and agreeable Sentiments of the Deity) and an holy Faith which is Productive of the aforesaid Virtues.

Those that desire to have a right Notion of the Religion of the Heathens, ought to weigh this Distinction rightly; for they did not in the least depend on the external Worship of their Gods, the Prayers they put up to them, or the the Vows they made to them; but meerly on Virtue it felf, to procure them Admission into Heaven. Cicero Lib. 2. de N. D. tells us why they were called Dive or Dee, Whatever thing has any Power in it, is more eminently called so, and that very Power is stiled a Deity; as Faith, the Mind, &c. which were dedicated in the Capitol by Emilius Scaurus; but Faith was confecrated before by Attilius Colatinus; there is the Temple of Virtue, and the Temple of Honour repaired by M. Marcellus before the Ligurian War which Q. Maximus dedicated. There were also those of Riches, Health, Concord, Liberty, Victory, The Power of Such things which are so great that they cannot be governed but by God, the very thing it self obtained the Name of a Deity. In Lib. 2. de legibus. It was well that the Mind, Piety, Virtue and Faith had external Consecration, they all have publick Temples consecrated to them at Rome, that those who possess them (which all good Men do)might be esteemedto have the Deities themselves inhabiting their Sonls. Pliny mentioning thefe, Lib. 2. C. 7. adds Chastity, Concord and Clemency. Dion. Hal. Lib. 2. adds Justice, Themis, Clemency and Nemesis, which his Ancestors worshipped; saying, Numa was the first that dedicated a Temple to publick Faith, and assigned Money out of his Treasury for the Sacrifices, as well as for the other Gods. Peace, Peace, Rest, Hope and Felicity likewise had publick

Temples.

From all which it is most apparent that by the Doctrine of the Ancients, all those things are reducible to the Rules of Virtue and Piety, which are necessary for living well and happily here, and to all Eternity hereafter. They still held that many things more were necessary to make their Piety consummate; as Sacrifices, Rites and Ceremonies, and abundance of fuch stuff; but yet unless the aforementioned Deities ruled and governed their Souls, there was no Admission into Heaven. Thus far therefore the Antients agree with us, who allow no Means of Salvation can benefit or advantage us without the Mind, Virtue, Piety and Faith. Thus it appears that the Heathens did not only agree with us Chriflians in worshipping the Supream God, but also in the same most principal and essential kind of Worship, and whoever does confult the Polemick Writings of the Heathen Theologists and Philosophers, that lived amongst the Christians (of whom fome few remained) will be readily convinced that they, as well as we, did embrace Piety and Virtue; fo that Celsus durst challenge the Learned Origen to shew what was in the Christian Religion that tended more to the establishing of Virtue than the Heathens had acknowledged before; nay fome go farther, and affert that their Precepts are more Strict and Severe, and tend more directly to this End. shall fay fomething of each of these in particular.

Of the MIND.

A N D first of the Mind by which the Antients understood no more than Right Reason. They esteemed a sound Mind beyond all things; for without it they could not make a just Choice of Religion, or lead an holy Life according to such Precepts, and reject false and spurious Doctrines.

of

COL

rat

fto

an

TIV

w

Tig

CO

m

th

en

Sa

by

th

th

ar

at

th

ti

T

m

C

L

A

K

The Wife and Sagacious amongst the Heathen received the first Principles of their Religion (fuch as, (1.) That there is one Supream God, (2.) That he ought to be worshipped, (3.) That Virtue is the principal Part of his Worship, (4.) That we ought to repent of our Sins, (5.) That there are Rewards and Punishments both in in this Life and hereafter) from the Mind or right Reason, and the rest derive its Authority from the Priestonly: To the first they gave a firm and entire Affent, the others they esteemed at best but doubtful and probable: Thus they did not contemn and reject the Revelations, Traditions and Dreams of their Priests, but were fomewhat cautious and not eafily to be imposed on by them, or run the Hazard of reposing an entire Faith in them. They did not think any Doctrines ought to be built on Faith only, though the most extensive, for they easily discovered how they might be imposed on by that Means. For these Reasons the Antients deified the Mind, but especially (as Varro, Lactantius, St. Augustine and others fay) that they might be endued with a good Mind. Livy tells us that T. Otacilius Pretor, vowed a Temple to the Mind, which afterwards when he was Duamvir, he dedicated and that it was built in the Capitol.

VIRTUE.

Virtue is next in order, being the genuine Offpring of a good Mind, Cicero calls her the Perfection of Nature. And I am of Opinion that Virtue is as much the Perfection of the Soul, as the Soul is of the Body. Those that have consulted the Writings of the Antients, will find them abounding with Encomiums on Virtue. They had fuch an high Veneration for her that they thought Heaven was bestowed on them for her fake only: Nor did they any more doubt but that a virtuous Man should arrive at the Seat of the Blessed, tho' he knew not where it was; than that a Traveller, going on in the right Path that leads to any magnificent City, must come to the Place he intended.

I need not infift long upon this Argument, only mention a few amongst the innumerable Places that are to this Purpose. Plato says that we should endeavour to be like God by Prudence, Justice and Sanctity. M. Ficinus, shews that Happiness is acquired by Prudence, Justice, Fortitude and Temperance, but that Souls are united to God by Love.

Cicero Lib. 2. Offic. says that all Virtue consisted in three things: First, In apprehending what is true and regular in every thing; what was most agreeable to every one, and what was the Cause of each thing. Secondly, In subduing the impetuous Agitations of the Mind. Thirdly, In the exercifing of Temperance and Fortitude, as much as Equity and Humanity will permit: This intricate Discourse of Cicero terminates in this. Again, Academ. Quest, Lib. 2. he afferts, that this Virtue unites us to God. And Seneca, in the Proem to his natural Questions, fays, Virtue enlarges the Soul, prepares it for the Knowledge of Celestial Things, and renders it fit and worthy to be admitted into the Society of God. The Poets as well as the Philosophers and Orators, have been extream Copious on this Subject.

The Romans paid religious Worship to Virtue and attributed divine Honours to her, as St. Augustine De. Civit. Dei cites out of Varro. Scipio Numantius erected the first Temple to Virtue, asterwards Mar-

C

W

San

and

and

wh

De

210

M

aff

an

Af

be:

mi

(uc

It

wh

line

ma Pie

M

Ly

fro

agi

Sh

an

cellus to Virtue and Honour. Plutarch. de Fort. Romanz and in the Life of Marcellus, fays, That when he intended to dedicate a Temple to Honour and Virtue, which he had built with the Spoils of the Sicilians; the Pontifices obstructed it, saying it was not right and agreeable to confine Two Deities in the fame Edifice. He then began to add another to his former. but was much displeased, and lookt upon this Impediment as an ill Omen. Cicero in his Oration against Verres, mentions the Temples of Honour and Virtue, which were contrived fo that none could go into the Temple of Honour but thro' that of Virtue ! Cains Marius built another Temple to Honour and Virtue when he vanquished the Cimbrians; which he built low, least if it should obstruct the publick Auguries, the Augurs should compel him to demolish it. He being a most acute and penetrating Perfon, knew well that the Worship of Virtue was not fo very grateful to the Priests and Augurs, that for his fake they would permit their beloved Gain they reaped from the People by the flying of their Birds and other ridiculous Fopperies to be any ways leffened, or the Credit of their Divinations impaired.

PIETT.

Plety is the natural Consequence of the Two former, for without a found Mind and Virtue there can be no true Piety; for where this Mind or right Reason doth not obtain, Nature is propense to frame and worship a salse and imaginary Deity. Without the Conjunction of Virtue all religious Worship is to no Purpose. The Antients divided Piety, sust and chiefly into that which is exercised towards God; secondly our Country and Parents; lastly our Neighbours, and those that deserved well in the World. Wherefore

1

t

r

S

e

bt

e

11

d

3

14

d.

Wherefere Cicero, Lib. 2. de Offic. fays. Piety and Sanctity appeale the Gods. And farther, There is no other Piety with Respect to the Gods, than an ingenuous and bonourable Opinion of their Deity and Understanding : and to believe that nothing must be expected from them, but what is most Just and Equitable, and Lib. 1. de Nat. Deor. he fays Piety, Sanctity and pure and chafte Religion, are to be attributed to the Gods. Valerius Maximus, Pliny, Dionysius Halicarnasseus and others afford us many Examples of Piety towards Parents and others. Seneca in his 76th Epistle says of Scipio Africanus, I am certainly perswaded that his Soul is returned to Heaven, from whence it came; not because be was the valiant and prudent Commander of vast Armies (for Cambyles the Furious was the same, and very successful) but for his eminent Moderation and Piety; It would be needless to add any more Examples. which Pliny fays were Infinite formerly. M. Attilim Glabrio dedicated a Temple to Piety in the Herbmarket; because of a most eminent Instance of Piety shewn by A. C. Quintius and M. Acilius to their Mother, who was shut up close Prisoner in her Lying-in; wherefore a Temple was erected to Piety in the very Place where the Prison stood.

CONCORD.

Concord is the certain and necessary Effect of the Mind, Virtue 'and Piety. Some distinguish it from Peace; that Concord hath Reference to the Disagreement of many; Peace but of two only. The Antients worship'd both these, that they might obtain a quiet and sedate Life, free from all Perturbations. She is described holding a Cup in her right Hand, and a Cornucopia in her Lest. Sometimes she had a Sceptre with Fruit coming out at the End, and at other times she had two right Hands join'd toge. ther. Aristides, in his Oration to the Rhodians, represents her Decorous, Compact and Self-agreeable in every thing; and by the Benignity of the Gods, permitted to descend from Heaven. She has Pow. er from Jupiter to fix the Hours; she only confirms all things, adorns the Fields with Flowers, allots every thing its own Fruit; and hath the ordering of the Possessions of others; she manages Affairs in the City as she pleases, bestows Persons in Marriages, and nurses and educates Children. She had many Temples in Rome, M. Furius Camillus the fifth Dictator vowed the first and built it in the Capitol. According to Plutarch and Ovid; There was an entertaining Room adorned with many Images, where the Senators used to meet; which Pliny makes great mention of, who also says when P. Sempronius Longus and L. Sulpitius were Consuls; Flavius vowed a Temple to Concord, if he did reconcile the Nobility to the Populace; and when Money out of the publick Treasury was not appointed for it, be built one of Brass with the Money, arising from the Fines of Usurers; and cut in a Brass Table that it was dedicated 104 Years after the Capitol. Livy lib. 9. mentions this, and Plimy speaks of the Chapel of Concord, lib. 35. C. II. Cicero also says something of the Temple of Concord. Quintins Martius being Cenfor, made the Image of Refer Concord and fet it up publickly; and C. Cassius being Cenfor placed it in the Court, and dedicated an Altar to the fame Goddess.

There were three other Temples of Concord in Rome, the last of which was either built or repaired by Livia Augusta. St. Aug. lib. 3. de Civ. Dei, makes mention of the Temple of Concord. From these Words of Livy it appears who had the Power of dedicating Temples: Macer Licinius dedicated a Temple

Ch

le t wer

Ano

lege

and that rusal

Galer

here and wish

Cuft

an A

ike ime

Rose

Com

Peace

he I

iver sof

ll gr

he v nly

her

le to Contord in Vulcan's Field, at which the Nobles were much enraged; for according to the Custom of their Ancestors none but a Consul or Emperour had the Privilege of Dedicating a Temple.

IS ts

rs

rld

ne

ne

iny

P.

;

cile

the

e of 75;

ars

ing

Al.

in ired

hele

de-

Temple

PEACE and QUIET.

Here was a Shrine and most magnificent Temple of Peace next the Forum, begun by Claudius and finisht by Vespasian. Some, after St. Ferom, say that the Vessels and Presents of the Temple of Fea rusalem were deposited here by Titus Vespasian, Galen fays the Professors of all Humane Learning met re here to dispute, that they might clear all Doubts a- and all Disputes in Concord. It were much to be wish'd that our Polemical Divines would observe this Custom in the Temple of their Souls. There was an Altar of Peace at Rome. Peace was represented ike a Woman holding an Ear of Corn, and someimes a Caduceus, crowned with Laurel, Olive, and Roses. Aristophanes makes Venus and the Graces her Companions. But Quiet, as well as Concord and Peace had a Temple at Rome, which was built without Pli- he Hill-gate. But because the Epithet of Quiet, is given to the Word Oreus or Hell, therefore Lud. Vives II. s of Opinion that the Worship of Quiet had only ord. Reference to the Dead. of

CHASTITT.

A Fter Concord and Peace follows Chastity; the akes grounded Concord, Chastity is much in Danger. he was adored as a Goddess by the Romans; but nly conjugal Chastity was to be understood by it : herefore Juno, Venus and Hymen were called conjugal gal Deities: But Juno was the Preserver of the genial Bed. So in Seneca's Medea. You conjugal Deities, and thou O Lucina! Preserver of the genial Bed. She had two Names, Patricia and Plebeia; a Temple in the Kine market, was dedicated to her by the first Name, into which it was forbidden for any that had been twice Married to enter. Plebeia had a small Chapel in the long Street, erected by Virginia, who who was of a Patrician Family, and afterwards marrying a Plebeian, her Sifter got her expell'd from the Rites of the Patricians, she refented this very highly; and convening all the Plebeian Matrons, complained of the Injury offered them by the Patricians; and built an Altar in a small Chapel, and made a Speech to them, exhorting them, that as the Men of that City did emulate one another in Valour, fo the Women might in Chastity; and that this Altar might be worshipped at by the most Chast and Holy, as well as that of the Patricians: and that none but a Matron of approved Chastity, and who had been married but to one Man, should be permitted to facrifice there. See the Story more at Large in Livy. Val. Max. lib. 2. fays, Those that were contented with one Marriage were honoured with the Crown of Chastity. So much for conjugal Chaftity which had respect to the Matrons only.

FAIT H.

Aith always had Divine Worship paid unto it; but not, as I humbly conceive, in the same Acceptation that many Divines now take it. For the Heathens were very far from being of the Opinion that any Person could attain Heaven, by any Faith tho' never fo lax; unless Virtue, joined with the greatest Piery, went before and prepared the Way for them fh

W

fa

th

1

m fin

25

Fi

Pla

Fa

on

the

on

I

tell

joi

we

duci

diff

the

the

mif

hov paf

Co Civ

Co

ent

blis

ents

diff

if th

they

them: Whereas some Theologasters affert, that they shall acquire Eternal Happiness by Faith alone: The Word then will need some Explication. H. Stephanus says that the Heathens formerly meant the same thing by Faith as we do now by Conscience; but I must dissent from him here, because if we compare many Places in antient Authors together, we shall find that they greatly took Faith in the same Sense as we do Fidelity: And Fiducia signified then what Fides or Faith doth now. This is clear from a Place in Livy, where he declares what Fiducia or Faith may be given to the Virtue, and Fides of one Theodorus.

I know very well that Faith was sometimes. tho' very rarely, by them taken for a Perswasion or firm Opinion of any thing; in which fense I conceive Cicero uses it, lib. 2. de Leg. where he tells us by Faith (as we faid before) but conjoined with the Mind, Virtue and Piety, it is by that we have Admission into Heaven: This Faith or Fiducia being conversant about a future State is entirely different from that which principally depends upon the Authority of the Relator. Now in Regard there was not the least written Word of God, or Promifes, concerning a future State amongst them, how could they have fo ftrong a Faith of things past? They never understood the Word to fignific Conscience, or took it for a Theological Virtue, but Civil and Humane only, whereby Bargains and Contracts were kept, Societies and Leagues were enter'd into, and Trade and Commerce was establisht. For tho' the Virtues, amongst the Antients, were the same as ours, yet Faith was a quite different thing; tho' I do not in the least doubt, that if their Minds were endued with Virtue and Picty, they did in a great Measure partake of Faith or a glo-X 2 rious

7

-1

55

X.

10

2-

it;

me

it.

the

any

the

for emi

Charlet T

rious internal Hope of a more happy State. What a great Estimation the Antients had for Faith, is evident from Cicero's Oration for Marcellus; where he says, There can be no Faith where Piety towards the Gods is wanting.

I thought it necessary to premise thus much concerning that Faith which the Heathens worshipped as a Deity. Cicero lib. 2. de Offic. fays the Temple of Faith was in the Capitol, and next to Jupiter's and lib. 2. de N. D. that Colatinus confecrated it. Feflus from Agathocles tells us, that it was confecrated in the Palace by Aneas before Romulus's Time. Dion. Halicarn. and Plutarch fay, that Numa Pompilius was the first that dedicated a publick Temple to Faith, and affigned Money out of the Treasury to defray the Charge of the Sacrifices, as it was done to the other Deities; to which I ratherlincline than to Fefus or Agathocles, because I have the Testimony of Livy also. That the Temple of Jupiter was near that of Fath, is not controverted; and it is the more probable because it was esteemed the most sacred Oath amongst the Romans to swear by Faith: And Jupiter himself is called Fidius and holy. Silius Italicus says Faith was before Jupiter and calls it, a filent Deity in the Breast. The Flamines that facrificed to Faith were cloathed in white Cloth, according to Numa's Institution. Cartarius says the right Hand was consecrated to Faith because that ought to defend it, but doth not produce his Authority; tho' perhaps this may be the Reason of that antient Effigies of Faith, where the right Hands of two Images are joined together.

* I a a to shall to charted the gale, salety a of bill ce

Ch

th

feo.

Do

15

an inj

In:

ed

25 0

eni

of o

jeć

de

HOPE.

Icero calls Hope the Expectation of Good; and the Romans worshipped her for a Goddess, fame Author fays, that the Heroes, being led by the Hope of Immortality, delivered themselves up to death, and gain'd Immortality: He mentions the Hope of afcending into Heaven in other places; fo that a firm Hope fignified the fame with them; as Faith or Fidicia doth amongst us; and accounted by both to be a Theological Virtue. There is an eminent Passage in Plato, which shews how Hope or Fear affects Men departing this Life; from whence it is plain what Great Men and Famous Philosophers thought concerning a more Blessed and Happy State: It is most certain, O Socrates, that when any Man thinks he shall (hortly die, he is posses'd with a Fear and Care for those those things, which he hath neglected in the former part of his Life. Then the Stories that were told concerning those who have led ill Lives, and are punished in the Infernal Regions, that were the subject of his Contempt and Derision beretofore, begin now to affect bim, and he is full of of doubts least they should prove true. So either thro the Debility of old Age, or the near Approach of another Life, he is full of Fear and Solicitude, and makes a very strict Examination and Retrospection into himself whether be bath injured any one. He therefore that finds his Life full of Iniquity will be full of Fear, like Children sometimes wakenedout of their Sleep, and live in Despair. But he that is conscious to himself of no Evil that he bath commmitted, enjays delightful Hope, which Pindar calls the best Nurse These were Plato's Sentiments. From of old Age. this it's Evident that a more happy State was the Object of Hope amongst the Heathers; which seems so deeply fixt in Mens Minds that the Fear of Death it felt

T

15

78

e

1-ut

is

b,

0-

E.

felf cannot eradicate it, till it brings Men to the ut most Felicity, if the other Faculties in him are not Desicient on their Parts, to this Purpose Ovid. de Ponto.

The we can nothing for our Merits crave; Yet we great Hopes from Divine Goodness have.

Therefore as the Heathers worshipped the same Godas we do, and had the same Notion of Virtue; we both must certainly have the same common Hope of Immortality. Cicero lib. 2. de Leg. says: The Souls of Men are Immortal; but the Virtuous enjoy Celestial things. And in his Book, de Senect. We ought not to lament that we must die ; because Immortality is the Consequence of it. Amongst many of the religious Tenents of the Heathens this folid Maxim obtained : That Virtue gave Men the Hope of Immortality. Cicero, lib. 2. de Leg. speaks of her Temple, and Livy fays it was in the Herb-market; and in another Place, that P. Victor built a Temple to Hope in the seventh Division of the City. She had another built by the Tyber when M. Fulvius was Cenfor. Dio also mentions another. She was represented feveral ways upon the antient Coins; but for that Coulult Rosinus.

LIBERTY.

A FterHope follows Liberty, then Safety and Felicity; the Poet joins the two former together by a necessary Consequence.

From the last Hope of things.

th

m

be

th

th

20

ar

al

C

C

W

n

tu

A

W

n

tl

0 ti

I

t

For this last Hope terminates in eternal Liberty. Cicero fays that Liberty properly is to live as you pleafe: And who would not live happily if they could? They thought therefore that pious Souls, departed this Life, did indulge themselves in the Enjoyment of this Liberty; that this most noble Faculty of the Soul might not be made in vain. Liberty was worshipped by the Romans as a Goddess, to procure them Liberty: for there is nothing more excellent and desirable in a well conflituted Common-wealth; but the Heathens did not think Eternity it felf divested of this Liberty; they imagined their Heroes, that were advanced to Heaven, in a State of perfect Liberty; and did not only enjoy Celestial but Corporeal Goods alfo, according to their Pleafure, and with an uncontrouled Liberty; which is plain from their Poetical History, (not to mention the Philosophers) who allowed them to do or act any thing that was not directly contrary or repugnant to a bleffed Nature. Cicero lib. 2. de N. D. mentions a Temple of Liberty. P. Victor founded a Temple to her on the Aventine Hill; also there is the Palace of Liberty; which is much taken notice of by Authors, but I do not understand what use was made of it; whether there were Auctions there as in others? Livy speaks of a Temple of Liberty, with very fine Brass Statues and Columns built by T. Gracchus; whose Porch was repaired and enlarged by Alius Patus and Corn. Cethegus, and Suetonius says it was restored again by Pollio. When Cicero went in to exile, P. Claudius the Tribune of the People dedicated his House to Liberty. Dio tells us that the Romans, in Gratitude to Fulius Cesar, by a publick Decree built a Temple to her. Let this suffice concerning Liberty, the chiefest Good that an upright Man enjoys both in this Life and that which is hereafter.

X 4

SAFETY.

SAFETT.

HE Goddess Salus or Safety was worshipped by the Antients, that she might bestow Safety on them, not only Corporeal and Particular, but that which had Relation to the more general and common State of the Republick; they had fo great Veneration for her, that they mentioned her Name only on Festivals. Macrob. lib. 1. Saturnal 16. Cicero lib. 2. de N. D. mentions the Temple of Safety, and Livy speaks of one built by Junius Bubulcus Censor, from whence the next Gate was called Salutaris. The Romans celebrated the Auguries of Health, which the Antients often mention. Cicero lib. 2. de Leg. fays, The Priests enquired by Auguries concerning the Safety of the People. Dio lib. 37. informs us how that was performed; The Romans (fays he) had been free from War for a Year, so that after a long Intermission of Time, they renewed the Auguries of Safety. It is a fort of Divination, by which they are inform'd whether they may request Safety for the People by the Permission of the Gods themselves, as if it were Impious to ask it without their leave; and a particular Day, every Year is fet a part for it, on which no part of their Army must be in the Field, nor no Enemy in View. Therefore they are not celebrated in imminent Dangers, especially intestine Broils. Otherwife it would be impossible for the Romans to observe this Day with this exact Strictness: Besides it would be most absur'd, when they are destroying each other, and whether they conquer or are conquered, must be very Miserable, to implore Safety from God. This shews us how arrogant the Priests were; that publick Petitions for Safety must not be put up without their good Leave. They strove to bring the Peoples Neck under their Yoak in all things, tho' very unjustly; for who, either in Peace

F are be of th

Pe

Go

or T pi fo Te

to

Bbatt

a

H

(a

1

0

1

e

t

n

y

7

r

15

27

to

t

n

Peace or War may not boldly entreat Safety from God without the Priests Permission, FELICITY.

Elicity was antiently worshipped as a Deity; that she would confer it on Mankind: Some are of Opinion that there is very little Difference between it and Beatitude because they are very often joined together in Authors as Synonymous. But they differ in this that the Antients esteemed Felicity to proceed from an external Caule, but Beatitude only from the proper internal Actions of the Soul. Thus they (especially Philosophers) were of Opinion that Virtue only could make a Man happy; for Fortitude would dispel all Fear and Terror, and Temperance, would quench the Flames of Luft, &c. Herodotus out of Solon gives us a very accurate Distinction between this Felicity, or being Fortunate, and Beatitude, when answering Crasus he says no Man can be truly called Bleffed; before he bath ended his Life well; therefore Men may be faid to be Fortunate in this Life, but not to ejnoy Beatitude till after his Death: So Ovid,

Before his Death and closing Funeral.

No Man can properly be faid to be Beatus or Happy in this Life, and the Heathers called them only so, who enjoyed Eternity in the Elysian Fields. St. Aug. lib. 4. Civ. Dei writes, That Felicity was a Goddess amongst the Romans, had a Temple and Altar, and very congruous Rites were performed unto her. Let this at present suffice to shew what the Sentiments of the Antients were concerning those Goddesses, which render render us happy here, and advance us to Heaven hereafter. I shall add something further in a more opportune Place.

There was the Temple of the Goddess of Help, that she might affist them; and Victory, that they might over come their Enemies; and others erected in Favour of the Emperours, as that to Cafar's Clemency, Agustus's Justice, Poppeas's Fecundity. I have been too prolix in treating of the Heathen Deities already in regard fome of them were fo far from being Gods, that they were not so much as good Men; from whence proceeded a total Depravation of Religion; especially when the sole Power of Government refided in one Person. For by the Infinuation of Flattery, almost all Adoration was not only transferred from the Supream God to the Emperours then living, but from the Heroes too, whom they themselves had placed in Heaven: So that Flattery subverted Superstition it self, as it formerly had supplanted true Religion; but what is most unsupportable is, that Superstition may get the Ascendency over the Ignorant and Timerous, but Flattery only obtains with the most Base and Profligate.

Of Expiations and Lustration; Sorrow, for Sin and Repentance.

Before I treated of such Heathenish Rites which may admit of a very favourable Interpretation; I thought fit to declare my Dislike of them, tho not of the End for which they were instituted; for they were very instrumental in reclaiming the Vulgar; and I would desire any Priest that now condemns them, to tell me what fitter Methods he could have found out.

Cha

I

ther

aua

difc

beli

ceff

dev

cure

tho

out

eith

No

the

fron

into pra

ner

or

Hea

Re

def

the

Wa

wl

by

Pr

lib

pi

I therefore begin with Expiations, Lustrations and other Solemn Rites, which were supposed to be Effeaual for the Purgation of the Soul. For having discoursed of those Virtues by which the Antients believed they obtained Heaven, it will be very neceffary to subjoin that which reduces those that have deviated from the true Path, into the right Way, and cures them of their Errors: and this the Antients thought was done by Expiations and Lustrations; without which they did not believe they were freed from either the Crime or Punishment. They had the same Notions of their Sins and Vices as we have; and they esteemed all Sin and Vice to proceed either from Anger, which being stirred up and enraged, grew into Malice and Fury; from Concupifcence and depraved Defires, exerting themselves in various Manners; the Society of wicked Persons; Imprudence or Ignorance of what was Evil. For which the Heathens, especially the Philosophers, applied these Remedies.

1. To restrain the Impetuosity of all evil Affections,

2. To wash away those Stains of Sin which had defiled their Conscience, and for which they selt a penitential Compunction; and by the Assistance of the Priest made Expiation, and purished their Souls.

3. To refrain from and avoid all evil and debaucht Company and Conversation.

4 To make a strict and diligent Enquiry into what Good it was they ought to embrace, and what Evil was to be shun'd and avoided.

5. To correct and curb those vitious Propensions, which proceeded from humane Frailty.

6. To make frequent and fervent Supplications, by devout Forms, according to the Direction of their Priests, to render the Gods Propitious to them. Plato lib.9.de Legibus, advises those who had turbulent and impious Thoughts arising in their Minds, that they would make

Wo

no:

wit

dor

Phi

to fiec

Aff

ple

tur

any

Di

pe

tur

wa

be

Wa

a l

to thi

mo

fhe

fic

D

le

ar

fu

h

th

kı ti

make their Applications to the Dii Averrunci; one of whom the Greeks accounted Jupiter, according to Lucian; and Apollo, according to Aristophanes. And afterwards he advises them to keep Company with good Men; and in another Place most earnestly exhorts them to apply themselves to the Study of Philosophy as the best Way to purifie the Soul. There was nothing delivered in the Theological, or Philosophical Schools of the Gentiles by the antient Writers both of Greece and Rome, but what tended to make Men live well and happy, and to guard and preferve them from all Evil. For all impious Persons after this Life should suffer Eternal Punishments; especially those who had render'd their Vices Habitual and Natural to them. Cicero, writing to Atticus fays; Sorrow for Sin is Great and Eternal; but the Gods were satisfied if Souls were purged and cleansed, either bere, or elsewhere, so that they were but purified. For they did think that Man, confidered fimply and in his own Nature, was neither Good nor Evil; but that he was inclinable both Ways, according to his Education; and that Vice and Sin were not fo radicated in Man, but that they might be totally weeded out and defroyed. So that unless the Soul was obstinately bent to Sin, it might be reduced to a good State by an internal Purification or an external Castigation; where Seneca fays, He that repents of his Sins is almost Innocent. And Ovid:

> He scarce has sinn'd, but reckon'd innocent, Who of those Sins doth heartily repent.

The Antients did not believe that so very many were condemn'd to Eternal Punishments: for they thought Divine Wrath had Bounds and Limits, and that the Supream GOD would not entirely destroy his Workman-

PARM

Workmanship, but rather repair and support it; for no meer Mortal Man here ever built an House only with a design to burn it. That this Reparation was done by Repentance, was the Opinion both of the Philosophers and Priests, who continually press'd Men to the Practice of it, that their Souls might be purified; but yet this could not be done without their Affiftance. They did well in perswading the People to Repentance; tho' the Soul of Man is natuturally fo prone and inclined to it; that without any Perswasive Motives, but meerly by the Internal Dictates of Conscience, we find it to be our indifpensible Duty. And indeed it is no more than returning into the Right Way from which we have wandered. Periander fays, When you have done amis, be forry for it: thus Repentance or Sorrow for Sin was to the Heathens a Remedy against all Evil, and a Plank after Shipwrack; which they had recourse to in the least Offences. Cicero lib. Offic. fays, Those things which feem small Offences, and are not regarded by many, ought to be the more carefully avoided; least they should become Habitual to us, and we should not sufficiently repent of them. Thus latent and occult Diftempers prove as fatal as the apparent; nay, the less they are perceiv'd, the more dangerous are they and incurable: and therefore Repentance is the only fure Medicine against the Diseases of the Soul. It's very probable Menander had reference to this, when he faid, That Repentance was a Crisis to Men. the Distemper of the Mind of Man being rightly known, he is restored to his Pristine state. The Antients were not ignorant what power Sin had in the Mind of Man; thus Lucretius confesses,

Anticipates its Torment, and can find

n

rich

m

I

tr

C

n

fo

n

Ь

No Hope of end to all his Miseries; Expecting greater still when e'er he dies.

He was afraid that Death might rather be the beginning of Mifery than the end, and that Men should fuffer more severe Punishments after it. From whence, and from many other places that might be produc'd, it is evident, That the Heathens esteemed Repentance the Universal Atonement or Sacrament of Nature. But now the Priest began to obscure and involve it in multiplicity of dark Rites and Ceremonies; that they might make Men believe they only had the Power and Authority of Divine Mysteries. If they would but entirely devote themselves to their Priests, they told them they might rest secure: for they affumed unto themselves to be Mediators between GOD and Man; and that GOD had committed fuch Power to them, that they could procure Pardon for the greatest Sinners: but the more Wife and Judicious amongst the Heathens esteemed this to be impious and audacious. Cicero lib. 1. de Leg. There is no Expiation for Sin and Impiety, to be bad from Men. And Ovid. lib. 2. Fast.

Too Credulous! who think that Blood and Slaughter, Is washt away with Streams of River-water.

So Livy Dec. 1. lib. 2. Cicero 2. lib. de Leg. but he seems to own that some lesser Sins may be expiated; That Sacred Rite, which is performed, and does not expiate Sin, is committing Impiety: what may be expiated, let the Publick Priests do it. But to the great Detriment of Virtue and Civil Society, the Priests boasted that they could expiate the most notorious Crimes; which made Sinners secure, and continually perpetrating new Villainies; depending on the Assistance of the Priest, they they fet the Vengeance of GOD at defiance. But nothing was ever fo deftructive to Virtue, and injurious to the true Worship of the Supream GOD, as this Religious Cheat of the Priests. For what is it that a wicked Wretch will not perpetrate, who can make fuch an easy Atonement for his Sins? But I must needs acknowledge, that if the Precepts of true Repentance had been joyn'd with those Sacred Rites, they had not fo much anticipated the Secret Counfels and just Judgments of GOD. If the words Panitentia or Panitudo, Repentance, seem to some to be Modern, and not used amongst the Antients, I shall not enter the Lists against them, in regard I can prove that they had a Sense of Divine Wrath, and Sorrow for Sin. It is beyond all Controversy, that what we call Repentance, amongst them was Sorrow for their Sins, which had provoked Divine Vengeance. For had they not been extreamly affected with an internal Sorrow for Sin, they had never invented fo many Sacred Rites to pacify the Gods; built and dedicated so many Temples; put up so many Prayers, and made fo many Vows. It would be tedious to recite all the Publick Testimonies they gave of Sorrow and Remorfe for offending the Deities; it is manifest from the common Consent of Writers, that the Heathers were always ready to attribute the Cause of Divine Wrath to themselves and their Sins, and to deprecate Divine Vengeance with humble and penitent Minds. I am well affur'd, that the Gentiles repented of those things that brought so many evils upon them, tho' the Word is rarely found in Authors in the sense it is now used: Nor do I in the leaft question but that Sorrow for Sin was a fign of Divine Grace amongst them, because it could proceed from nothing but the Supream GOD Himself, and is the best and most certain way to reduce Sinners into the paths of Virtue. Seneca fays most excellently, The knowledge of Sin, is the beginning of Salvation. For when once a Sinner comes to be sufficiently affected with Horror for Sin, he will foon repent of it, and prefently apply himself. to the practice of that Virtue from which he had formerly swerved. The Heathens were of opinion that Repentance, or Sorrow for Sin, was efficacious and fufficient where the Offence was committed against the Majesty of the Supream GOD; but not when Injuries and Contumelies were done to Men, they required Satisfaction and Compensation to be made here: But if the Priests should endeavour at that time to perswade Mankind, that Repentance was not a sufncient Atonement for Divine Justice, but that a caore severe Punishment was required than an internal Sorrow and Compunction for Sin; these Arguments might be offered against them. (1.) That the Supream GOD was the common Father, and therefore would not be very averfed to a penitent Son. (2.) That Men were obnoxious and prone to Sin by Nature. (2.) That Men do generally commit Sin in purfuance of some Advantage to themselves, under the false Notion of an apparent Good, and not in Contempt and Defiance of GOD; and tho' they are deceiv'd herein, they did not commit it with an evil and malicious Intention, or in affront to GOD. (4.) That a sufficient Punishment for Crimes of fuch a Nature may be inflicted in this Life. (5.) If any further Punishments still remained, that the Supream GOD could either punish them after this Life, for some time, either shorter or longer, according to their Demerits. Now if GOD can inflict Punishments equivalent to the Crimes committed, what occasion was there to have recourse to so many bloody Sacrifices (as the Priests invented) to appeale the ox an Ma they

Peo

and

78. A

ther I tiens tions ter o dive

and

thefe

ficati

fication from made they them had p from or Experistra for it for the my.

ough

the Deity; as if GOD took delight in the Blood of Oxen or (what is horrible indeed) of Men; or that an Ox could make an Atonement for a Man, or one Man for another, or that it was just and equitable they should be facrificed in their stead. These Artifices were made use of to strike Terror into the People, at the Performance of these dismal Rites: and also that they and their Accomplices might feast themselves with the remainder.

f

0 t y

e

I come now to discourse of those Rites the Antients used in the Purgation of their Souls. Expiations were not perform'd on one account only, or after one but many different manners. This occasion'd diversity of Names, Expiationes, Expiamenta, Piamenta, Piamina, Februæ, Lustrationes, Purgations of Souls and Purifications. I shall say something of each of These Words differ very little in their Signification; for, according to the Doctrine of the Head thens, they all tended to a certain Purgation, or Purification. But all things could not be purged and pufified by external Rites: for I have shewn before from Cicero and others, that no Expiation could be made for Crimes committed against Men: nor did they think that all Sins were fo atoned for by any Piacular or Lustral Sacrifice, that GOD would quite pass them by. Tho' these Sacerdotal Lustrations or Expiations had power only to pardon and absolve the Conscience from some forts of Sins; when a publick Lustration or Expiation was performed for any Crime, the Magistrate had no Authority to inflict any Punishment for it. Lustrations and Expiations also were perform'd for the Welfare and Prosperity of the City and Army. The greater Concourse of People there was, the greater they thought the Lustration or Expiation ought to be. Dion. Hal. lib. 5. tells us how the pubick Expiation of the City was perform'd; The Con-Miraspiracy being broken, the Senate made an Order that a Lu-Atration (hould be performed for the whole City; which the Author of the Civil Slaughter had made absolutely necessary to be done: for it was impious to perform the Sacred Rites and Sacrifices before Expiation was made for that Crime, and the Plague removed by customary Lustrations. When the Chief among St the Priests had performed all the Religious Ceremonies according to the Custom of the Country, the Senate ordered publick Thanks to be returned to GOD, and Sports to be celebrated. Here it is worth observing, what great Veneration they had for publick Expiations, for no one durst perform any Religious Rites or offer Sacrifice, till that was over. Dion. Halicarn. lib. 10. speaks of another publick Lustration of the Ci-The Roman Army being drawn up, their Enfigns of War were Lustrated, before they undertook their Expedition: a Bull, Ram, and He-Goat, or (as Livy has it) a Sow, a Sheep and a Bull, being led thrice round the Camp were facrificed. Livy Dec. 4. lib. 10. mentions strange Rites that were observed by the Macedonians in the Lustration of their Army, by diffecting a Dog. Dion. Halicarn. 4. lib. 10. speaks of the Lustrations of an Army after the War. There were Publick and Private Expiations in time of Peffilence. Murders that were committed involuntarily, were expiated by Lustrations and Piacular Sacrifices; which being perform'd, the Homicide was put under a Yoke. Dion. lib. 4. gives the Story at large of M Horatius Tergiminus, who killed his own Sifter: 19 doth Livy, who adds, that he was expiated at the publick Charge. Herodotus tells us of Expiation for in voluntary Murder, and fays, it obtain'd amongst the Greeks and Lydians. See Diodorus Siculus lib. 1. con cerning the Expiations used by the Ethiopians. gives us this Account of the Februæ, which wer much the same with Expiations. There was antient an form Par Fest

Ch

in i peri

Qui fices, their bruæ

The bullus

Amba Fields, Ambur Ciry perfor

of the washin may colb. 1.

iven Dies 2 -

.

es

11. i-

nok

as

ed ec.

v d

ny, aks

ere

ffi-

ily,

nder

F M. : fo

the

an Opinion that the Februæ were what soever was performed to cleanse the Conscience of Malefactors, and procure Pardon for their Sins, or Rest for the Souls of the Departed. Festus fays, The Month was called February, because in it, being the last Month of the Year, the People perform'd the Februæ, Lustrations and Purgations for 12 Days together; and all Persons in general on those Days were employ'd in procuring Rest and Quiet for the Souls of the Dead, with Piacular Sacrifices, and lighted Torches, and Wax-candles about their Graves. Ovid. lib. 2. Fast. tells us what the Febue formerly meant:

Those Expiations which our Fathers used.

The Fields and Fruits, according to Columella and Tibullus, were Lustrated:

That it may fruitful prove, and Plenty yield, Antient Lustrations we perform in th' Field.

see Virgil's Buc. and Georg. Sentus Pompeius fays, The Ambarvale is that Sacrifice that is led about the Plow'dfields, when Divine Rites are performed for the Fruit. Amburbiæ were Rites perform'd at the Lustration of the ces; City and Suburbs; fee Lucan lib. 1. The Romans perform'd Expiations for their Houses and the Ghosts of the Deceased. Dreams also were Expiated, by washing the Body, and offering Sacrifices; as we may collect from Persius Satyr. 1. Juven. Sat. 6. Tib. the ants were the Eighth for Girls, and Ninth for Boys; con ecause they were Lustrated then, and Names were Plin iven them. So Macrobius Saturn, lib. 1. The Lustrici wer dies were formerly those on which Children were Lustratient, and had Names given them. Those that perform dientifications and had Names given them. them them were call'd Lustratores, and if Women Lustratrices. Suetonius, in the Life of the Emperour Claudian, mentions the Dies Lustrici; and Persius Sat. 2.

To attone the Gods the Bantling up they take,
His Lips wet are with Lustral Spittle; thus They think to make the Gods propitions.

I could enlarge here, if I were not oblig'd to Brevity. These were most of the Rites used by the Heathers for the Purgation or Purisication of the Soul. Purgation was chiefly used in the Ceremonies of Bacchus, to which that of Virgil alludes:

- And Bacchus's Mystick Fan.

The Fan is an Utenfil made of Osers and broad, that is, a Corn-sieve, which the Country-men use to gather their First-fruits in, because it is large, and to Fan their Corn: Columella lib. 2. Cap. 20. But the Ears are best thresht with Clubs, and clear'd with Fans. Servius upon that place of Virgil I just quoted, says: He therefore calls them the Mystica Iacchi, because the Sacred Rites of Liber Pater appertained to the Purgation of the Soul; and Men were purged by his Mysteries, as Corn is in the Fan. Hence it is said when Typho tore Osiris's Members in pieces, Isis put them upon a Sieve. For Liber Pater is the same in whose Mysteries the Fan is used; because, as I said before, he purged Souls and was called Liber, because he makes Souls freee. And a little further: Some also call Liber Pater Licnetes, and the Fan Litnos; where it is the Custom to lay the Child as foon as it is born. Lienetes also is one of Bacchus's Name mention'd by Plutarch de Isis & Osir. Harpocration fays, the Fan is convenient for all Beginnings and Sacri

Fr fol and gate pur

or 1

HOS

Sa

tin

me

So

He whi and Pin place Ima before form Fier Tha

ing!

tho

Sacrifices. See those Learned Expositors Hugo Grostius, and Dan. Heinsius concerning the Fan; that is mention'd Matthew 3. 12. and Luke 3. 17. Virgil mentions a Threefold Rite observed in the Purgation of Souls amongst the Heavens:

Some Naked are expos'd to th' open Sky; Steeping in rapid Whirlpool others lye; Some from their Crimes Fire does purify.

From hence Vossius infers the Heathens had a Three-fold manner of Purgation; by Air, Water and Fire: and Servius in the 6th Aneid, says, Those three Purgations are used in all Sacred Rites: For they are either purged with a Torch and Brimstone, or washt with Water, or fann'd by the Air, as was perform'd at the Sacred Rites of Bacchus. So Virgil I. lib. Georg.

Small Puppets hang on a lofty Pine-tree.

at

to

the

ns.

15:

use

arfe-

Cy-

n 4

ries uls

da

ana

das

me

tion

and

Here observe that Oscillæ were small Images with which they offered Sacrifice to Saturn, for themselves and theirs. Macrobius fays, This Oscilla hung upon a Pine-tree, and being purged by Air, did supply the place of an External Purgation of the Soul; like those Images that were thrown into Rivers, as I mention'd before, supplied the place of the Man that should have been thrown in himself. We have spoken before of Purgation by Water or Lustration, and have faid lomething of Purgation, or Expiation by Earth, or that Fiery Power inclos'd in it: I shall only here observe, That Purgations were instituted to be perform'd by those things of which Man's Body is principally compos'd, fo that the Elementary Parts of Man being purified, his whole Fabrick would be so too. For the Heathens suppos'd them to be the places where Vices Vices were first hatcht, and from thence crept into the Soul. I know very well that those Rites are very foolish Representations; but where shall we find any that do exactly quadrate with the thing it felf? Without some fort of Rites and Ceremonies the People would have fo great a Latitude, and the Priests no opportunity to exercise their Power and Authority: it is sufficient therefore that these things were excogitated for the Purification of the Soul fomehow or other. And indeed had the Priests but possess'd Mens Minds with true Penitence and Horror for the Crimes committed by them, it would have fared much better with Mankind: but what is much to be lamented, they were always very cautious, left their impure Flock should get rid of their Spots and Stains, without their Assistance. They pretending to be the only Persons to whose Charge the Keeping of the Publick Rubbing Brush (if I may so fay) was committed. I hope I have fufficiently Thewn, that as the Heathers worshipped the same most Good and Great GOD, and Common Father with us, and by the fame Virtues as we now do, fo had they the same Penitence (which we acknowledge to be the most certain Sign of Divine Grace) either generated in them from an internal Sense of Sin; or infused into their Hearts from GOD himself. bloody Sacrifices, or other the more fevere parts of their Religion, were introduced to no other end, than that the Wrath of GOD being denounc'd against Men for their Sins and Wickedness; they might repent of their Sins, and stand pure and expiared before GOD. Thus much of Penitence, which ! shall presume to call The Sacrament of the Heathens.

Reward

9101

th

Reth

th

w

to

to

N

B

tl

OS

d

t

1

to ry ny

f?

ole

no

y:

0-

10 s'd

10

ed

be

eir

nd

nġ

pfo

ly

ft

15, oe

e-

10 ir

of

d,

a.

1

REWARDS, or PUNISHMENTS.

T TAving treated of that Virtue by which we have access to GOD, and that Penitence by which we approach Virtue; it now remains, that I should flew what was the Heathers Opinion concerning Rewards, or Punishments, which is the last part of their more folid Religious Worship. They held, that there were Rewards for the Good, and Punishments for the Bad, both in this Life and hereafter, which they grounded on the Justice and Goodness of God; and the Writings of the Antients abound with Testimonies, that they did acknowledge them to be the chiefest Attributes of the most Good and Great God. They own'd that the Supream God was to be Worshipped for himself; the most excellent Nature being worthy of the utmost Veneration: But still farther, they hop'd for a more happy State than they could arrive to in this Life, as the effect of his Goodness, it being an Inbred Notion in their Souls, that God both could, and would, bestow a better Life than this upon them, if they were not deficient on their Parts. They did not conceive, that either God, or Fate, had plac'd them in this World to no purpose, and then at last to return to nothing; or that they had attain'd to fuch a degree of Perfection in this Life, that they were capable of nothing more Noble and Excellent than what they enjoy'd here; they had some secret dictates of Nature, that hinted other things to them; and that God had no fuch Hatred or Aversion to Humane Virtue, but that he would make a Distinction between the Just and Pious, and the Wicked, in an Eternal state of Happiness. The Antient Heathens, Theologists and Philosophers, taught freely in their Schools, Vices were first hatcht, and from thence crept into the Soul. I know very well that those Rites are very foolish Representations; but where shall we find any that do exactly quadrate with the thing it felf? Without some fort of Rites and Ceremonies the People would have fo great a Latitude, and the Priests no opportunity to exercise their Power and Authority: it is sufficient therefore that these things were excogitated for the Purification of the Soul fomehow or other. And indeed had the Priests but possess'd Mens Minds with true Penitence and Horror for the Crimes committed by them, it would have fared much better with Mankind: but what is much to be lamented, they were always very cautious, lest their impure Flock should get rid of their Spots and Stains, without their Affistance. They pretending to be the only Persons to whose Charge the Keeping of the Publick Rubbing Brush (if I may so fay) was committed. I hope I have fufficiently Thewn, that as the Heathers worshipped the same most Good and Great GOD, and Common Father with us, and by the fame Virtues as we now do, fo had they the same Penitence (which we acknowledge to be the most certain Sign of Divine Grace) either generated in them from an internal Sense of Sin; or infused into their Hearts from GOD himself. Their bloody Sacrifices, or other the more fevere parts of their Religion, were introduced to no other end, than that the Wrath of GOD being denounced against Men for their Sins and Wickedness; they might repent of their Sins, and stand pure and expiated before GOD. Thus much of Penitence, which! shall presume to call The Sacrament of the Heathens.

Reward

w

R

th

th

711

0

W

to

G

to

B

tl

OSB

d

t

n

t

1 ţ

ry

13 ple

no

y:

0-

10 sd

tor

ed

be

eir

nd

ng

p-

fo

tly

oft

us,

be ge-

or eir

0

nd,

c'd

ley

h I

S.

rd

REWARDS, or PUNISHMENTS.

T TAving treated of that Virtue by which we have access to GOD, and that Penitence by which we approach Virtue; it now remains, that I should shew what was the Heathers Opinion concerning Rewards, or Punishments, which is the last part of their more folid Religious Worship. They held, that there were Rewards for the Good, and Punishments for the Bad, both in this Life and hereafter, which they grounded on the Justice and Goodness of God; and the Writings of the Antients abound with Testimonies, that they did acknowledge them to be the chiefest Attributes of the most Good and Great God. They own'd that the Supream God was to be Worshipped for himself; the most excellent Nature being worthy of the utmost Veneration: But still farther, they hop'd for a more happy State than they could arrive to in this Life, as the effect of his Goodness, it being an Inbred Notion in their Souls, that God both could, and would, bestow a better Life than this upon them, if they were not deficient on their Parts. They did not conceive, that either God, or Fate, had plac'd them in this World to no purpose, and then at last to return to nothing; or that they had attain'd to fuch a degree of Perfection in this Life, that they were capable of nothing more Noble and Excellent than what they enjoy'd here; they had some secret dictates of Nature, that hinted other things to them; and that God had no fuch Hatred or Aversion to Humane Virtue, but that he would make a Distinction between the Just and Pious, and the Wicked, in an Eternal state of Happiness. The Antient Heathens, Theologists and Philosophers, taught freely in their Schools,

Schools, that God would bestow good things on the Good, and inflict Punishments on the Wicked. But when they also observ'd that Good Men here, were under Calamities and Oppressions, and on the contrary the Wicked flourish'd and enjoy'd all the Pleafure and Plenty of this World; the Justice and Goodness of God were certain Arguments, that the Good receiv'd ample Rewards, and the Wicked fuffer'd condign Punishments, after this Life; for if it were otherwise, there would be no manifest proof of them; that Good Men suffer'd very much in those times, is very evident from many inflances in Antiquity, particularly fron Seneca, who fays, Believe me, that God doth not bestow the Blessings of this Life upon the Virtuous, but tries and proves them. This atfords them ample inftances of Exercifing their Virtues, for Good Men themselves, in a Prosperous Estate; seldom are such signal Examples of Virtue; as when Fortune frowns on them, then they have great Opportunities to shew themselves in Adversity. But when the Antients observ'd Tyrants, and the most profligate of Mankind, to enjoy the greatest Affluence of all things in this Life; they concluded, from their Notions of Divine Justice, that they were Thus far the Notions of the Punish'd hereafter. grave Philosophers, nay, even of the very Priests, were Just and Regular: But when they came to ascertain the Places, where those that had deserved well, receiv'd their Rewards, and the Guilty were Punished, as the Elysian Fields, the Isles of the Blessed, the Stars and Heaven for the Virtuous; Tartarus, Erebus, Orem, and the four Infernal Rivers for the Vicious, they fell into very gross and absurd Errors; for they could easier have convinc'd the People, that Divine Justice had alotted Punishments after this Life, in some Place or other, according to what every Perfon

Per Pla det ver

me wit und the for

an

in

had Co and the green ous the the nay

fay

Sor spe mo de Th

Spe che Person had deserv'd, tho' they were ignorant of the Place, Manner, and Duration of it; than rashly to determine it to be in obscure Subterraneous Caverns near the Centre of the Earth, or in Apartments of the middle Region of the Air, attended with other Circumstances, equally ridiculous and uncertain; tho' their making Heaven and the Stars the Seat of the Blessed, was not at all incongruous; for the Universal Opinion of Mankind was, that an Eternal and Happy State, was to be sound only in God and Heaven.

Here some perhaps will object, that the Heathens had not such clear Notions of Good and Evil in their Consciences, nor the just Rules of Virtue to guide and govern their Practice as the Christians have, and therefore they could not be posses'd of so strong hopes of a better Life, and dread of future Punishments.

.

S

t

t

١,

e

e

n

d,

le

5,

5,

or

e,

U

To this I answer; First, as to Conscience, Cicero lays, It's Power is very great on either side, so that the greatest Solace of Mind arises from a good Conscience; and on the contrary, those that are Conscious to themselves of a Vicious Course of Life, have the dismal apprehensions of Punishment always before their Eyes, which many of the Antients confess; nay, even Lucretius the Epicurean, fays, A Conscious Mind bites very bard. They also give us the fign of a Good Conscience, as Fortitude, Faith, Confancy, and Foy; and those of an Evil, Fear, Terrour, Sorrow, and Despair. Suetonius, in the Life of Nero, speaks of such Men, that could not endure the remorfe of their own Consciences; and Cicero lib. 11. de Leg. fays, The Furies themselves baunt the Impious. They add also External Signs, where the good Conscience was, was evident by the Countenance and Speech, the Body being erect, the Eyes and Mouth chearful, couragious, and void of Fear, and many iuch-

tl

G

tl

W

U

C

Sa I

> w a

> tl

ti

T

A

1

a

7

a

P

a

E

fuch-like: Where there was Guilt in the Conscience, it was attended with Blushing and Paleness, Hesitation in the Speech, talking Abruptly, Trembling, and many others, which they accounted true Indications of the Conscience. Therefore in regard Divine Goodness did impart the same Intellect, Freedom of Will, and other Animal Faculties to them, as well as to us, as is very apparent from all the Writings and Actions of the Antients; there is no reason to question, but the same Goodness did also vouchsafe them, the same Conscience endu'd with the same common Principles which direct and actuate us now; nor will any Person, tolerably converse fant in their Works, in the least deny it.

From whence I conclude, that if they practifed the same Virtues that lead to Eternal Happiness, as well as we, they had also the same Conscience, and the same Divine Grace beslow'd upon them. Does not the Apostle, Acts 10. say, That the Alms and Prayers of Cornelius, that was but a meer Gentile, reached Heaven. The Heathens might gather undeniable Arguments of Divine Justice and Goodness from Conscience alone, and thence conclude a future State. 'Tis a most excellent passage in Cicero, lib. 3. de N. D. The weight of Conscience would be very beauy, if God had no regard to Virtue and Vice. He thought that Divine Justice would not be very conspicuous, if Virtue had no other Reward, besides the empty Praise of the People, or Vice had no other Punishment after this Life; but only the External Reproach and Infamy it met with here? Who would not indulge himself in all sensual Pleasures, if he had no other obstruction, but vain popular Applause? Wherefore Cicero most wisely infers, that the reason of Virtue and Vice, is Divine. His Opinion is, that nothing can be more Antient or agreeable agreeable to the Most Good and Great God, than that those who by Virtue had made themselves like the Gods, should be admitted into their Society. Nor was this Cicero's Sentiment only, but of all the Heathers; who Advanc'd their Heroes into Heaven, calling them by the Names of Stars, and the Stars by their Names, as I have fufficiently shewn before.

0

d

15

d

es

d

e,

e-

·ss

u-

0,

Ie

nhe

er

e-ıld

he P-nat O-

10

ble

The Greeks had Names for Conscience, our mignore, with respect to the Judgment, and ownishous to the In the Conscience, are not only written some Common Principles, deriv'd from Universal Wisdom, by which the World is govern'd; as, To do as you would be done by; In doubtful Matters, chuse the most fafe; and in a word, the most general Axioms of Theological and Moral Virtue, and the Rule and Discipline to correct the Will, and determine it to what is Just and Good; therefore when freed from all Errors and Imperfections, it afforded Good Men the greatest Solace and Support; and on the contrary, tormented the Wicked with unspeakable Horror and Anguish: So Cicero, for Roscius fays, Every Man is tormented by his own Wickedneß, and afflicted by his Folly; evil Thoughts, and a bad Conscience, terrifie the Seneca de Morib. advises, That we should have a greater regard for Conscience than Fame, for Fame may deceive us, Conscience never can. Polybius says, There is no Witness so formidable, or so impartial a Judge as Conscience, which Inhabits the Mind of every one. Plutarch also Writes, An Evil Conscience in Men, is like a Putrify'd Sore, which Corrodes, and by degrees Consumes, and brings the Body into a Consumption: To this that in Ovid. de Ponto, is applicable.

'Tis less to suffer, than deserve our Doom.

But then, How pleasant is it to be Conscious of a good Life, and the Remembrance of good Actions, (says Cicero lib.

lib. de Senect.) This every Person will find experimentally true, when he grows in Years; and nothing else will alleviate his great Pains besides it, in the Hour of Death. It is a common faying, When you are on your fourney, or in Solitude, bave an especial guard over your felf, left Evil Thoughts should creep in at that time, and get footing in your Mind; fo that he that is most remote from an Enemy, ought to take great care of himself. The Supream God inspects Man's Conscience, and makes a Judgment from that, of what Good or Evil he hath done, rather than from his External Actions. Seneca's Ad-· vice therefore is excellent, Commit nothing to your Conscience, that you cannot trust a Friend with; for whatfoever may be thought with fafety, may be Communicated. God is the Searcher of Hearts and Consciences, and fees our most private Secrets. Cicero lib. 12. Tusc. Qu. Conscience is the greatest Theatre of Virtue: For tho' we may want an External opportunity of exercifing our Virtue, yet there never wants Evidences of it in the Theatre of Conscience; for, when our Sins are Purg'd and Wash'd away by Repentance, God then fees nothing but what is pure and clean; the Virtues being disposed in their proper Places, and ready upon all ccasions that offer, to exert themselves in External Actions (for Virtue doth not Personate all things promiscuously, but what is adapted to the present occasion) and receives the Praise of doing Well, and the Shame of doing Ill; whilst those Common Principles sit Judges there, and the Supream God is Arbitrer. Menander fays, God is the Conscience of all Mortals; but this must be underflood Poetically, for neither God, nor any Deity is Conscience, butitisa Faculty constituted in the Soul itself, by the Supream God, to judge of Good and Evil; and from thence produces the Hope of a better Life. Others Others say, That Conscience is not God, but a Demon, Genius, or Angel, that assists, and informs the Soul. Plato, Proclus, and some other Platonists and sollowers of Orpheus, were of this Opinion; and when it was pleas'd, was call'd a Grace, when enrag'd, a Fury; as Mar. Ficinus says, in Rep. Plat.

Thus a good Conscience is the beginning of Eternal Salvation, and an evil one, of suture Punishments, so that not only after this Life, but now also there are Rewards and Punishments in the Theatre of Conscience, by way of anticipation. But the Heatbens were of Opinion, Rewards were more glorious after this Life (where the Soul was sufficiently Purged) and Punishments more unsupportable.

Let us enquire fomewhat particularly concerning the Places of Rewards and Punishments, according to the Notions of the Antients. Plato in Phado, after he had taught, that a Pure Soul did pass to Pure and and Eternal things, and the Impure being infected with terrene Matters, was attracted to them, and that it carried along with it the Affections and Habits, both of the Understanding and Will, that it had acquired, whether Good or Evil, which would immediately prejudice it or redound to its Advantage; he adds, that they are led to Judgment in a certain Publick Place, by a Demon, Genius, or Angel; which being over, they are all dispers'd thro a Place with three Ways to different Seats; some, and those the most Pure, ascend up into Heaven; others are cast down into Hell, and others wander up and down in the middle Region of the Air without a Guide: And the Demon, or Angel, promotes, and improves the Intelligence of the Good, but raises Perturbations. and diffracts the Imagination and Affections of the Wicked; and so makes the Reward of Virtue, and Punishments of Vice, to belong chiefly to the other Life. Then

up

nit

far

for

me

in

ap

or

le

on

Po

W

th

fe

pr

pr

ti

fr

d

th

N

F

h

Then fpeaking of the Places destin'd for Punishments, he mentions four Infernal Rivers after an Allegorical manner; that Acheron is a Purgative River under the Earth, and alluded to Care and Sorrow, and corresponded with the Air, and the Southern Climates of the World; Phlegeton to Fire, and the East, and by reason of its Heat, had a Power of Punishing, and so did chastise for Anger and Libidinous Defires; Styx and Cocytus, to the Earth, and the West, and there Hatred is Punish'd by Weeping and Mourning: Mar. Ficinus fays, they only differ in this, that Styx is rifing out, and Cocytus progressive; which Mystery Ficinus did not rightly apprehend. After these, there was Tartarus, Hell, the lowest place in the Infernal Region, in which the most Impious were Punish'd, not for their Benefit and Amendment, but only for Example-fake which he mentions in his Gorgia, and lib. 1. Rep. also. For the Platonists held two forts of Sin, Curable and Incurable. The Curable are fuch as are not yet become Habits, but are committed with some Reluctancy and Repugnancy of Mind, and are always attended with ferious Repentance. The Incurable are fuch as are contracted into Habits, and admit neither of Repentance nor Reluctancy; and these fort of Sins (being beyond Hopes of Remedy) the Platonists call Incurable; and therefore Plato in Phado, tumbles fuch wicked Wretches into Tartarus, or Hell, from whence none return.

Hence it appears, that the Heathers believed that Reluctancy did alleviate Sin, Repentance did Cure it and quite remove it; but if any did still remain, that was Wash'd away, by a Punishment ordain'd after this Life, for that end. Plato says, that Souls in this Life are best Purished by Philosophy; so that all compleat and perfect Philosophers being rais'd by Contemplation.

templation to Heaven and Celestial things, mount up to a Supercelestial Place, and there live to all Eternity. Porphyrus and famblichus, are much of the same Opinion, asserting, Souls that are perfectly restored to God, can never fall again.

According to his Gorgia, Tartarus, or Hell, is a fort of Dungeon (where are the most severe Punishments), and tells us a very pleasant Fable concerning Man's last Judgment: Not only Plato, and other approv'd Authors, but the Poets also, make mention of the four Rivers of Hell, but it would be needless to infert those Fictions here; tho I cannot omit, that according to the Fables of the Antient Poets, the Gods used to swear by the Stygian Lake, which encompasses the Infernal Regions; and if they were guilty of Perjury, they did divest themfelves of their Divinity for a Year, and were depriv'd of Nectar and Ambrofia, the Reason whereof they deduce from another Fable; but I cannot apprehend the Mystical Reason of it, and have mention'd this in my Chapter concerning the Worship of Water.

There was another River also, called Lethe, which made Men forget all that was past: The Etymology of its Name, as well as of the rest, may be derived from the Greek Fountains, by those that please; my design being to shew, that the Antients did believe that some Men had great Grief and Perturbations of Mind, when they departed this Life; and that others were only like those in a Slumber, tho' that their Sleep represented Eternal Death.

The Furies and Harpies, were Pluto's Affistants in Hell; and Cerberus also, whom some call Triceps, three Headed; and Hesiod Centiceps, hundred Headed; his Office was to lie at Hell Gates, and Fawn upon all that came in, but Seize upon, and Tear in pieces, thole

Then fpeaking of the Places destin'd for Punishments, he mentions four Infernal Rivers after an Allegorical manner; that Acheron is a Purgative River under the Earth, and alluded to Care and Sorrow. and corresponded with the Air, and the Southern Climates of the World; Phlegeton to Fire, and the East, and by reason of its Heat, had a Power of Punishing, and so did chastise for Anger and Libidinous Defires; Styx and Cocytus, to the Earth, and the West, and there Hatred is Punish'd by Weeping and Mourning: Mar. Ficinus fays, they only differ in this, that Styx is rifing out, and Cocytus progressive; which Mystery Ficinus did not rightly apprehend. After these, there was Tartarus, Hell, the lowest place in the Infernal Region, in which the most Impious were Punish'd, not for their Benefit and Amendment, but only for Example-fake which he mentions in his Gorgia, and lib. 1. Rep. also. the Platonists held two forts of Sin, Curable and Incurable. The Curable are fuch as are not yet become Habits, but are committed with some Reluctancy and Repugnancy of Mind, and are always attended with ferious Repentance. The Incurable are fuch as are contracted into Habits, and admit neither of Repentance nor Reluctancy; and these fort of Sins (being beyond Hopes of Remedy) the Platonists call Incurable; and therefore Plato in Phado, tumbles fuch wicked Wretches into Tartarus, or Hell, from whence none return.

Hence it appears, that the Heathens believed that Reluctancy did alleviate Sin, Repentance did Cure it and quite remove it; but if any did still remain, that was Wash'd away, by a Punishment ordain'd after this Life, for that end. Plato says, that Souls in this Life are best Purified by Philosophy; so that all compleat and perfect Philosophers being rais'd by Con-templa-

ten

up

nit

fan

fto

for

me

ing

ap

on

lef

on

Po

w

the

fel

pr

th

pr tic

m

of

fre

de

th

M

W

SI

H

H hi

al

templation to Heaven and Celestial things, mount up to a Supercelestial Place, and there live to all Eternity. Porphyrus and famblichus, are much of the same Opinion, asserting, Souls that are persectly restored to God, can never fall again.

According to his Gorgia, Tartarus, or Hell, is a fort of Dungeon (where are the most severe Punishments), and tells us a very pleasant Fable concerning Man's last Judgment: Not only Plato, and other approv'd Authors, but the Poets also, make mention of the four Rivers of Hell, but it would be needless to infert those Fictions here; tho' I cannot omit, that according to the Fables of the Antient Poets, the Gods used to swear by the Stygian Lake, which encompasses the Infernal Regions; and if they were guilty of Perjury, they did divest themfelves of their Divinity for a Year, and were depriv'd of Nectar and Ambrofia, the Reason whereof they deduce from another Fable; but I cannot apprehend the Mystical Reason of it, and have mention'd this in my Chapter concerning the Worship of Water.

There was another River also, called Lethe, which made Men forget all that was past: The Etymology of its Name, as well as of the rest, may be derived from the Greek Fountains, by those that please; my design being to shew, that the Antients did believe that some Men had great Grief and Perturbations of Mind, when they departed this Life; and that others were only like those in a Slumber, tho' that their Sleep represented Eternal Death.

The Furies and Harpies, were Pluto's Affistants in Hell; and Cerberus also, whom some call Triceps, three Headed; and Hesiod Centiceps, hundred Headed; his Office was to lie at Hell Gates, and Fawn upon all that came in, but Seize upon, and Tear in pieces, those that endeavour to get out; from whence comes his Name Cerberus.

I am almost tir'd with the insipid and delirious Fictions of the Poets, tho they do contain a true Mystical Sense in them. I now come to the Philofophers, who held different Opinions concerning the state of Souls. They agree about the Diversity of the Manner and Degree of Rewards, whether it be in Heaven, in the Stars, some Atherial, or Airy Regions where they feed on Airy Fruit, the Isles of the Blessed, or the Elysian Fields. But the Heathens do not agree about Future Punishments. Plato lib. 9. de Leg. following the Pythagoreans and Egyptian Priests, says, that Human Souls return again into Human Bodies, in which they fuffer Punishments, suitable to the Crimes they committed in their former Life-time; this was the Opinion of the Egyptian Priests, and Magi. They thought there could be no better Purgatory for Humane Transgreffors, than that the same Souls should suffer in Humane Bodies for what they had done; which Plotinus the Egyptian, thought so agreeable to Reason, that in his Book, de Providentia, to solve the Doubts concerning the Justice and Goodness of God, he openly declares, whatever the Providence of God doth not retaliate in this Life, it will in the next; tho' not according to Humane Reason and Justice only, but in a Brutal manner; fo that those that were formerly the Souls of Men, will become the Souls of Brutes; but he was the only Platonist of this Opinion: For tho' Plate himself, speaks sometimes concerning the Migration of Souls into Beafts, yet he does it after so Ridiculous a Manner, that sufficiently shews, he is not in earnest, and only meant it Allegorically; for which confult Mar. Ficinus. This Opinion was very Antient amongst the Egytichose ans.

ens.

Indi

the

Тга

Day

ove

any of t

Life

of S othe

fensi

and

into

the]

or a

the

Soul

the .

that thin

amo:

unle

and ' both ;

and z thens

intro

datio

Supp

anot turne

meer

A

T

ans, and Pythagoreans, and Moderns now in the East-Indies, whose Priests, called Bramines, perhaps from the Antient Brachmans, hold a Metempsychosis, or Transmigration of Souls into Beasts, at this very Day: Which Paradox hath gain'd such Authority over the People, that they will not Kill or Taste any Animals, for fear they should swallow the Soul of their Father, or Grand-father.

The Opinion of Plate of the state of Souls after this Life, seems far more probable. That the first Nature of Sensation, which is the substantial Origine of the other Senses, and contains the whole Power of the ensitive Faculty after this Life is closed up in it self, and putting on an Aerial Body, (with it enters into one Body, and goes out of another) and that the Humane Soul Inhabits this Terrestial gross Body for a small time, but the Airy for many Years, and the Celestial or Atherial for ever. Then adds, these souls being clothed with Airy Bodies, do revenge the Injuries done them in this Life, or the Bodies that then belonged to them.

All which, I leave my Reader to judge of, as he thinks fit, tho' there is nothing which we can find amongst them, that carries more probibility in it, unless it be those common Principles; That God is Good and Just, and therefore he will Reward and Punish Men, both in this Life, and after it, according to their Actions and very Thoughts: But the great Men amongst the Heavibens, began to wander beyond these known Bounds; introducing many things that had not the least Foundation in Humane Reason, or any other Faculty to support them.

Thus, the Philosopher adds one thing, the Priest another, and the Poet many more, that quite over-turned the Fabrick of Truth, and reduced it to a meer heap of Rubbish. For what can be safely established

Ct

mo

bu

of

fiv

Vi

the

ty

wh

rat

and loo

and

Dio

Ag

hac

we

ded

Th

10 cole

unf

her

as b

of the

the

Div

brac

whi

and

Rig

who

ticle

enjo

hoo

blish'd concerning the state after this Life, besides those Common Principles mention'd before, unless we did partake with the Inspector of Humane Consciences and the Divine Counfels.

Some of the Antients, very judiciously said, that the Good, would remain Good, and the Wicked, Wicked, to all Eternity; yet none have shewn us where the Place for Rewards and Punishments is, or made any probable Conjecture of the Nature of the Punishment, or its Term of Duration; nor will the common Dictates of Reason inform us, that a light Punishment should be of long continuance, and a more intense shorter. Here therefore (as in many other Articles of Religion) the Heathers did load glorious Truth with Probabilities, Possibilities, and Falsities, that they almost stifled and smothered it; like those that buil dthe Roof of an House, so weighty, that it bears down the folid Walls.

Yet not only the four Articles mention'd before always remain'd intire, viz. 1. That there is a Supream God, 2. That he ought to be Worshipped, 3. That Virtue is the Principal of Divine Worship, 4. That we ought to Repent of our Sins, but this last also stood and will endure to all Eternity, That there are Rewards and Punishments both in this Life and after it. For tho Thousands of Errors should be heaped upon their Basis hteReason of Divine Worship is so supported by these five Columns joined together, that no Height whatever that is built upon them, will be able to da mage or endanger the Building. These therefore are those Firmaments of Universal Divine Providence and pure Religion, which never were or e ver can be concealed from any Age or Country therefore whatever was Promulgated by the Prief formerly in unintelligible Words, mysterious Fables fictious Revelations, and ambiguous Rites and Cere monies

them

monies, imposed upon the credulous People and had but a sandy Foundation. The greatest Men in all Parts of the World could never add any thing to these sive Articles, which could more promote that true Virtue, (which makes Men like God and renders them sit for his Society) or Piety, Purity and Sanctity of Life.

e

-

1, 15

n

e ht

a

14 ad nd

t; h-

ore

bat

and

irds

ho

afis.

nele nat-

da

ovi

r e

try;

riet bles

ere

It would be worth the while to examine whether what Additions have been made to them, have not rather enervated Religion and made it less strict and regular by pretending to obtain Divine Grace sooner by some auxiliary Helps and external Affistances. I know very well that Traditions and a copious Credulity have supplied many things in all Ages and Countries in Favour of Mankind, as if they had dropt directly from Heaven; but they either were felf-inconfiftent and of no Value unless they deduced their Genealogy from these five Articles. Thus, with Grief be it spoken, they wore Vizards or were daubed with Paint, and had a Partycoloured Coat made up of fuch Shreds, which were unfeemly and dishonourable to pure Religion: When her reverend Aspect, and seamless Coat, was such as became a chaft and noble Matron.

But what is still worse, by this Means the Parts of of true Religion being abdicated or rejected, Men for the most part became Atheists, and Contemners of Divine Justice and Providence; or if they did embrace the whole of Religion with those Superstitions which attended it, they imposed upon themselves and that internal Court within them, and deserted Right Reason, which is the best Rule of Life. Those who did neither, but strictly adhered to these sive Articles, tho' they admitted of some things that were enjoined by the Supream Authority of the Priesthood yet they thought there was nothing in them by which they could obtain the Fruiton of God, and would bring them to Heaven. This was the Opinion of the Heathens; for if you look into those Times you'l find it was a very bold Attempt in all Ages to reject what the Sacerdotal Order had introduced into Religion from their Traditions or Revelations. The People were not inclined, nor did they think it fafe to oppose those things which if it pleased God pos-In short it was incumbent on the fibly might be fo. Person affirming to prove the Doctrine he delivered; and to permit the People at the same time a Freedom of judging: And it was much better for them to doubt than to deny. The aforesaid five Articles, which are written in the Heart, were cordially entertained by the Antient Heathens, they were not fo fond of the rest, especially those that were esteemed Wife amongst them. There was none that could give fuch entire Credit to the particular Revelation of any Priest, or to his Dream, when he had lain a whole Night in the Temple; or tho it were di-Stated to him by a Demon, Genius, or God himself (as he imagined) fo as to repose a Faith in it, when it was a doubtful Matter that seemed so very like a Lye, and there was only one Witness who bore Testimony of himself. It may be answered, the Priests did draw some good Consequences from it. were Good it would naturally gain Reception, but if Evil no wife Man could believe it, tho' pronounced by the Articulate Voice of one that called himself a God.

Z 2

If again it be faid this was spoken in the Temple and from the Tripod. I answer who stood by and was Present with the Priest; and certainly knew that it was the Voice of God, and would corroborate his Testimony? Was there ever any Person in sormer Ages so samiliar with God, that he knew him by his

Voice :

V

th

ľ

th

pl

ге

ui

PI

D

Pr

in

ev

gr

as

D

to

WO

pa

the

mo

ac

dif

fht

for po

pre

is l fal

tio

Di

W

hav

Me

We

d

S.

ic

f-

n

s,

1-lo

ed

ld

on

1 2

1-elf

en

a

efts

it

if

ed

fa

ole

7 29

it

his

ner

his

Voice ; or that did ever hear him imitaring a Voice, that did ever pronounce any thing Evil or Unjust? Tis my establish Opinion therefore that the Heathens accounted these five Articles as Common Principles and felected and feparated them from all the rest, and recorded them in their interior Court as uncontrovertible Truths; and whatever else the Priests added from their Oracles, Revelations and Dreams, they either gave them Reception only as Probabilities; or else totally rejected them as fmeling too Rank of Cheat and Imposture: Now as in every Proposition that is advanced, some new Degree of Knowledge is excited; it will follow that as there were different Degrees of Proofs, so different Degrees of Assent or Dissent must arise in the Auditors; fo that we may justly conclude that in that wonderful Hodg-potch of Religion, contriv'd and patcht up by the Priests, the Heathers did esteem these Propositions as altogether undeniable, others more or less probable, and others absurd, contradictory, impossible or false.

But if it be objected that these Truths were not discoverable perfect and entire, but involved and shrowded in Lyes and Fictions. I answer the some light and trivial Truths, like things which support themselves in the Air, or float upon the Water, presently fall down or sink when any heavy Weight is laid on them and cannot rise again till it either salls away or is taken off. Yet the sive abovemention'd Truths ever were, and always will be, of that Divine Nature, that like the Sun-beams, which no Weight can depress, nor any Wind blow out, they have darted their glorious Rays into the Minds of Men in all parts of the Earth, where they did but exercise their natural Use of Reason. These then were the parts of the sound Religion of the Heathers; the rest were either factitious Fables, saint Resemblances, or frivolous Ceremonies, amongst which (to the great Prejudice of Mankind) some savoured of Distraction and others of Impiety.

Now in Regard all thefe things were imposed upon the People by the Impostures of the Sacerdotal Order, the Fault must lye at their Door; for the People very eafily submitted to whatever was commanded by the Pontifical College: Here the Patrons of the Heathers, may tax me with making too fevere Reflections upon their Religious Worship; for besides the true Practice of Virtue; they had Faith, gave Alms, and had publick Prayers as well as we, and their Hierarchy and Priesthood was very exemplary and eminent; now why might not they embrace that Faith and those Rites they received from their Ancestors, as well as we have done; and they are not to be blamed for approving those things which have been delivered to them thro' a long Tract of Time.

It is very manifest that the Heathers endeavoured to prepare themselves for the Worship of God by abstaining from eating Flesh; and not only the Philofophers, amongst whom Porphyrius was very Famous but their great Men in the State also, as Numa, Pompilius, and the Emperour Julian practifed Fasting very much. Volaterranus fays that Amphiarus the High-prieft, commanded those Priests that intended to receive and deliver plain Answers with Sincerity, to abstain from Meat for an whole Day, and three Days from Wine. Alex. ab Alex. lib. 6. fays the same was commanded those that officiated about facred Things amongst the Trezenii. Those that would be initiated into the facred Rites of Isis were to fast ten Days. Apuleius lib. 2. Which is very probable was practifed by those that were intimated into those

0

IS

15

t

e

a

d

)-

15

1, ig

e

d

γ,

10 bs

90 ft

le

fe of

lend

of Cybele; there being fuch an Agreement between the Rites and Priefts of both Goddesses. To this Tertullian refers, when speaking of the Castos of Isis and Cybele, The Castos was a Fast for ten Days. Here is not meant a Total Abstinence from all forts of Refreshment, for that, according to Physicians, would kill a found Man in four Days. There was a Fast appointed every fifth Year in Honour of Ceres, commanded by the Sybils Books; Livy lib. 44. Dion. Hal. speaks of Holy Fasts Sacred to Ceres: He also fays, That the Albanians in time of Publick Mourning abstained from Flesh. That Alms or Benevolence was practis'd by the Heathers, is evident from Acts the 10th, and that they were also acceptable before GOD. It was faid of Antonius Caracalla the Emperour. That He was not sparing in bestowing his Bounty, nor backward to give Alms. Stobaus, Laertius, and others report, That Democritus and Aristotle amongst the Philosophers, and Demosthenes the Orator, were very liberal in giving Alms to the Poor and Indigent. Homer says, GOD will punish those that do deny Alms to Beggars at their Doors. This is most evident, by that antient Tenderness that was shewn towards the Poor. fo that there were very few Beggars.

It cannot also be deny'd but Publick Prayers were put up when any thing of Moment or Consequence was to be done. Casar lib. 41. says, The Senate decreed Twenty days to be spent in Prayers. Cicero, against Cataline, speaks of Supplications made to the Immortal Gods by a Decree of the Senate, and that it was perform'd at the Shrines of all the Gods. There was nothing more frequent amongst the Antients than to make Vows to the Gods; when they were in any Straits and Difficulties, they put up devout Prayers, that their Knees were crippl'd. I cannot conceive any one would doubt that the Supream GOD would lend a gracious Ear to them, when he recollects from the place above quoted, how it fared with Cornelius,

Z 4

W

N

ir

A

S

in

T

in

P

al

(t

W

fu

of

m

W

in

W

th

re

ac

cr

th

A

in

th

th

m

A

fre

fre

th

Su

Bu

Die.

a meer Heathen.

Tho' there was a Hierarchy amongst the Heathens, yet it was not every where according to the fame Form. The Luperci, Priests of Pan, were introduc'd into Italy by Evander King of Arcadia, before Rome was built, and settled on Mount Palatine. Sacred Rites were perform'd in February, for purifying the Inhabitants: Dion. Halicarn. lib. 1. gives an Account of their mad Rites. Cicero pro Calio calls them A Savage Society. There were formerly three Orders of those Imperci; the Fabian, Quintilian and Julian afterwards, in Honour of Julius Cafar. Amongst the Exotick forts of Priesthood may be accounted those instituted in Honour of Ceres, and perform'd by Priestesses. The Politii and Pinarii, Priests of Hercules, were very ancient; they deriv'd their Names from two Noble Families, and undertook to perform the Rites of Hercules after the Greek Custom, for feveral Ages. There were Priests long before these, not only in Greece and the East, but amongst the Aborigines; and there are many Instances amongst the Antients that Kings themselves were Priests; Livy lib. 1. and Dion. Halicarn. lib. 2. tells us of many Orders of Priests instituted by Numa Pompilius; others extinguish'd by him, whose Offices were afterwards supply'd by the Flamines Diales. The antient Worship of Jupiter Juvans or Pater, was by him transferred to them. I find, according to Festus, two fort of Flamines; the Superior called Patricii, and the Inferior Plebeii: So that Choul is mistaken, who mentions' Arch flamines as a Superior Degree, who presided over the rest. There were Fifteen Flamines Diales, says Festus, who were in great Estimation, and Ministred to Jupiter. Some of these Flamines withing the said of the with the were were called Curiales or Curiones; as Quirinales and Martiales the Priests of Quirinus and Mars. Romulus instituted Twelve Arval Brothers, who perform'd the Ambarval Sacrifices; so called, because before they Sacrificed they went round the plow'd Field. Numa instituted Twelve Salii to Mars Gradious, who carrying Bucklers sung Hymns called Saliaria, with Leaping and Dancing, which being ended they had Suppers called Saliaria.

d

d

n

-

ot

i-

ne

Uy

rds

r-

nf-

vo he

n-

re-

nes on,

nes

There were many other forts of Priests; for Numa alone instituted Sixty Priests or Ministers of the Gods (besides Common Priests of the Tribes, and Hundreds who perform'd Sacred Rives) who were increas'd in fucceeding Ages. He would not admit the Office of a Priest to be fold, nor dispos'd of by chance; but made a Law, That two should be chosen out of each Ward, that were above Fifty, who excelled others in Virtue and Birth; and had fufficient Estates, and were of an hail Constitution; they were to enjoy that Honour all their Life-time; free from War, by reason of their Age, and from all City Service on account of their Office. He commanded some Saered Rites to be perform'd by Women, some by Boys, that had both Father and Mother, and (as the fame Author fays) that the Priests Wives should affist them in the Performance of their Office.

The Romans borrow'd their Rites and Customs from the Greeks, says Dion. Hal. and the Virgins amongst the Romans perform'd what the Canephori did amongst the Grecians; and the Camilli as the Cadoli. And as the Romans had their Rites and Customs from the Greeks, so in all probability they had theirs from the Eastern People: for it was they that spread the first Fables in the World, and the most antient Superstition was derived from them. Numa Pompilus also would have a Vates or Prophet out of every Tribe.

lend a gracious Ear to them, when he recollects from the place above quoted, how it fared with Cornelius,

a meer Heathen.

Tho' there was a Hierarchy amongst the Heathens, yet it was not every where according to the fame Form. The Luperci, Priests of Pan, were introduc'd into Italy by Evander King of Arcadia, before Rome was built, and settled on Mount Palatine. Their Sacred Rites were perform'd in February, for purifying the Inhabitants: Dion. Halicarn. lib. 1. gives an Account of their mad Rites. Cicero pro Calio calls them A Savage Society. There were formerly three Orders of those Imperci; the Fabian, Quintilian and Julian afterwards, in Honour of Julius Casar. Amongst the Exotick forts of Priesthood may be accounted those instituted in Honour of Ceres, and perform'd by Priestesses. The Politii and Pinarii, Priests of Hercules, were very ancient; they deriv'd their Names from two Noble Families, and undertook to perform the Rites of Hercules after the Greek Custom, for several Ages. There were Priests long before these, not only in Greece and the East, but amongst the Aborigines; and there are many Instances amongst the Antients that Kings themselves were Priests; Livy lib. 1. and Dion. Halicarn. lib. 2. tells us of many Orders of Priests instituted by Numa Pompilius; others extinguish'd by him, whose Offices were afterwards supply'd by the Flamines Diales. The antient Worship of Jupiter Juvans or Pater, was by him transferred to them. I find, according to Festus, two fort of Flamines; the Superior called Patricii, and the Inferior Plebeii: So that Choul is mistaken, who mentions Arch flamines as a Superior Degree, who presided over the rest. There were Fisteen Flamines Diales, says Festus, who were in great Estimation, and Ministred to Jupiter. Some of these Flamines

fi

n

il

r

tl

tl

n

fr

tl

S

1 were called Curiales or Curiones; as Quirinales and Martiales the Priests of Quirinus and Mars. Romulus instituted Twelve Arval Brothers, who perform'd the Ambarval Sacrifices; so called, because before they Sacrificed they went round the plow'd Field. Numa instituted Twelve Salii to Mars Gradivus, who carrying Bucklers sung Hymns called Saliaria, with Leaping and Dancing, which being ended they had Suppers called Saliaria.

0

es

1,

es

There were many other forts of Priests; for Numa alone instituted Sixty Priests or Ministers of the Gods (besides Common Priests of the Tribes, and Hundreds who perform'd Sacred Rives) who were increas'd in fucceeding Ages. He would not admit the Office of a Priest to be fold, nor dispos'd of by chance; but made a Law, That two should be chosen out of each Ward, that were above Fifty, who excelled others in Virtue and Birth; and had sufficient Estates, and were of an hail Constitution; they were to enjoy that Honour all their Life-time; free from War, by reason of their Age, and from all City Service on account of their Office. He commanded some Saered Rites to be perform'd by Women, some by Boys, that had both Father and Mother; and (as the fame Author fays) that the Priests Wives should affist them in the Performance of their Office.

The Romans borrow'd their Rites and Customs from the Greeks, says Dion. Hal. and the Virgins amongst the Romans perform'd what the Canephori did amongst the Grecians; and the Camilli as the Cadoli. And as the Romans had their Rites and Customs from the Greeks, so in all probability they had theirs from the Eastern People: for it was they that spread the sirst Fables in the World, and the most antient Superstition was derived from them. Numa Pompilius also would have a Vates or Prophet out of every

Tribe, to be present at the Sacred Rites; the Greeks called him Hieroscopos, and the Romans Aruspex. He also made a Law concerning the Priests and Minifters of the Gods; that they should be appointed by their Wards, whose Election was ratified when it was approv'd by the Augurs; who, with the High Priests and two Sacrificers, gave Sanction to the Laws: at which time the High Priests Office was not only to take care that Solemn Prayers were put up, and and Vows perform'd, but debated and determined concerning those things that had reference to Religion, in the Senate. Cicero lib. 4. ad Atticum, fays, The High Priests were Senators. They also determined all Differences that arose about Sacred Matters, as well between Private Persons as Magistrates, and those that Officiated in Holy Things. Nor were they oblig'd to give the Senate or People any Reason for what they did. Those of this Highest Order of Priest bood or Pontifices, were call'd Teachers, Administrators, Keepers and Interpreters of Holy Things. When one of them dy'd, the People did not elect another, but the College chose one they judg'd most fit, out of all the Citizens; who enter'd upon his Office when their Judgment was approv'd by a happy Augury. For the Augurs were esteem'd most expert in all forts of Divinations, and did Prognosticate not only from the Flying of Birds, but from Signs in the Air, Heaven and Earth. These Augurs also made their Conjectures from Curfes (which were things ominous or offensive, a Voice proceeding from something unknown, or the concourse of Men or Animals that were accounted inauspicious) the Winds, Prodigies, Oracles and Portentous things. The Augurs were present at the Sanction of Laws and Greation of Magistrates; they were distinguish'd from the Order of Priesthood in this, that these only Presided over Auguries

ir

m

fr

72

te

th

A

guries and Predictions, they over Sacred Rites; ye the good Success of Things to be transacted was vested in the Augury; as Cicero lib. de N.D. fays, who was a Publick Augur himself. Frequent mention is made of their College amongst Authors. Romulus establish'd four Augurs, who were afterwards increas'd to Twelve, which was the number of the High Priests; and the Eldest was Master. The High Priests and Augurs at last appointed the Senior amongst them to superintend over Divine Worship only; and he was call'd Rex Sacrorum; who tho' he had the Name of a King, yet his Authority was confined to Religious Matters, Dion. Hal. lib. 5. The Aruspices inspected the Sacrifices upon the Altars, from whence according to some they were called Haruspices; others derive it from Harugo, the place where the Sacrifice was shut up. I am of the former Opinion, for they were called Extispices also, from inspecting the Intrails; they were Diviners as well as the Augurs, and the Women were called Haruspica. But this would require an entire Volumn.

The Heathens had some Books which they esteem'd facred, as the Libri Lintei, kept in the Temple of Juno Moneta at Rome, which contained the Fate of the Roman Empire. The Egyptians had a Book written in Red Letters, which was in great Veneration amongst them, which they report to have received from an Hawk, dedicated to the Grand-father of Osiris or the Sun. The Greeks had some Books or Letters, very Famous for containing the Sacred Rites of the Eleusinia. There were others called the Books of Apollo, and the Hetrurian Books, and the Books of the Sybils, all full of Predictions, which none but the Priest of Sybil durst open or pronounce. There were other Books that contain'd the Mysteries of Auguries and Predictions by the Intrails of Beafts. Others cal-(11.11)

n

٧.

ts

n

1-

1-

1-

at

s,

re

ot

er

11-

ies

led Fulgurales, because they contain'd Observations about Lightning. Others Rituals, comprehending the most Principal Sacred Rites; the most Famous were the Eight Books by Numa Pompilius, in which were all that related to Religion and Sacred Things.

Tho' the Heathens may bring fuch Arguments, and many more, of their Virtue, Piety and Antiquity of their Hierarchy, and that it became very Eminent and Conspicuous; tho' they produce their Sacred Books, full of Prophecies, which proceeded from those who were Inspired with a Divine and Prophetick Spirit, by which they prove their Communion to have been very Antient and Common: and altho' they make it appear that they used the same Means (efpecially as much as the Rule of Right Reason could direct) as we now do, and by that Means endeavoured to obtain a Celestial Life. It will still be imposfible for them to acquit themselves of the Suspicion of Idolatry, or even from the Practice of it; (for they gave great occasion to the People to fall into very gross Errors, who had not a right Notion of their Symbolical Worship) and that their Histories were not Fabulous, their Rites ridiculous, and in short, that all Virtue and Piety was not Restored and Adorned by the Christian Church.

But it will require a further Enquiry to discover what was Good and Bad in their Religion. Every one will readily acknowledge that these Five Articles are Orthodox and Catholick; tho' some will not allow them to be sufficient to procure Eternal Happiness. Those of this Opinion seem to me to pronounce a bold, rash and severe Sentence, in regard the Divine Judgments are not to be penetrated into with meer Reason; also I shall not presume to affert that they are altogether sufficient: the Opinion of those who judge more tenderly and reverently concerning GOD's Judgments, feems to me the most probable, whilft Man does all that is in his Power : forit is not in him to repose an entire Faith and Asfurance in the Truth of Traditions, especially when they are controverted, nor can any Man by the Affistance of Common and Right Reason, add another to our Five Articles; which will render Men more Sincere and Pious, and more promote the Publick Peace and Tranquillity. I very well know, That many Doctrines were spread abroad every where, by which Sinners were encourag'd with the Hopes of Pardon, which afforded great Solace and Confolation: But it is much to be feared, that unless they were cautiously and justly explain'd, they might prove very mischievous; for considering that Pardon for Sin was obtain'd on fuch easy terms, they would foon Relapfe, and fall into greater Abominations: for whilft they could depend on attaining Heaven by 'Auxiliary Assistance, they would generally omit and neglect what was to be perform'd on their own Parts. The Priests will answer, that Virtue and Repentance were both enjoin'd and imply'd. Tho' this be granted, common Experience tells us, Men have been more prone to endeavour to procure Eternal Happiness by External Means, than from Virtue and Internal Penitence.

con-

If more be required to compleat the Religious Worship of GOD, than what is contain'd in the aforemention'd Five Articles, the Priests of the former and present Ages will tenaciously affert it is contain'd in fome Oracle deliver'd by Divine Inspiration, or commanded by the Word of GOD. But, with Submiffion to fuch Great Men, one of the Laity amongst the Heathens would answer, That these things are requifite, to prove the Truth of an Oracle; or what is the Word of GOD.

(1.) That it may be prov'd, beyond all Contradiction, that the Supream GOD, did use to speak with an Articulate Voice, and deliver Oracles.

(2.) That the Priest who heard that Oracle, was certainly affur'd that it proceeded from the Supream GOD, and not from a Good or Evil Angel; and that he was not in a Trance or Delirious, or between Sleep and Awake at the same time.

(3.) That it may evidently appear, that Oracle or Word was faithfully recited and delivered to the People; or, where occasion requir'd, written and recorded, and transmitted to Posterity from the Autography of their Priests; so that if any things should happen to be added, diminish'd or alter'd, it might be corrected by its Authority.

(4) That it may be manifest to all, That the Doctrine which has its Original from the Oracle, or the Word of GOD, has such an intimate regard to Posterity; that it was absolutely necessary it should become an Article of Faith, especially seeing most things of this Nature were coin'd in the Mint of a single Evidence. When the Priests have perform'd this, the Lay Heathen will readily submit to their Injunctions.

ti

al th

th

ei W

CHAP. XVI.

A Censure of the Religion of the Heathens, and the Occasion of it.

When I considered, that any Religion whatsoever, when it had obtain'd in all Ages and Countries, was only Promulgated, to lay a more strict obligation on Men, to do that which they were were oblig'd before to do voluntarily, and that Universal Peace and Concord might be maintained amongst them: I began strangely to admire, that the Priests, for the most Part, professing the same Religion, did Animate and Excite the People to Dissentions and bitter Animosities, and make them act things quite contrary to their known and express Duty. This put me on the enquiry, whether there were not some Destructive and Pernicious, as well as Vain and Frivilous Opinions, mixt with Matters of Religion

0-

nd

61

ey

re

Therefore, feriously considering the various Parts of that most Antient and generally divulg'd Religion of the Heathens, I began to collect those that were absolutely Necessary, and grounded on common Reason, esteeming them Principally afferted and freed from the Dirt and Rubbish in which they lay: Thus, not without a frequent and accurate Diffection of, and Inspection into Religions; I found those five Articles I have so often mention'd, and thought my felf far more happy than Archimedes. Nothing could be more grateful to me, notwithstanding the many Gods or Deities Worshipped by the Heathens, than that they Universally acknowledged, as an unquestionable Truth, that there was one Most Great and Good God, and that he was to be Worshipped before all others, and that with Virtue and Piety. There could be no better or furer fign of Divine Grace, Operating in their Hearts, or fafer expedient found out (notwithstanding all their solemn Expiations and Lustrations) to assure them of the Remission of their Sins, than a fincere Repentance. alfo, could be more confentaneous to Divine Justice, than that God would Reward or Punish every one, either here or hereafter, according to his Thoughts, Words, and Actions. When

dic

the

far

tha

19101

ma

thi

log

red

Gos

W

cele

ano

der

Mo

we

the pro

ing

iea

lun

Op

tion

wh

had men

and tho

and

Pra

cier

tho

hav

con

When I had collected thefe great Truths together. I made further enquiry, what the Priefts had, or could add to them, by which we might have a more certain Rule of Faith, Eternal Happiness, Integrity, and Sanctity of Life, would be more promoted, or the common Tranquillity better established. I observ'd, many things were, and many more might be added, but they did rather Debilitate and Enervate these Truths, than Strengthen and Corroborate them; and this put me upon a diligent Enquiry after what they were. Thus as I began with the Original Causes of the Religion of the Heathens, so I intend to close my Work with this Censure, and am altogether indifferent what Judgment my Reader passes concerning me, being sufficiently prepar'd to encounter the utmost Contradiction.

And where indeed, will you find any of the Famous Philosophers affert, that the Supream God, being always happy, lived free from all Care and Trouble, and Molestation, and therefore left the Government and Administration of all Sublunary things, to the inferiour Deities, but especially, the Heaven and fix'd Stars; and had written the Laws and Eternal Fate of the World in them? It would be very unaccountable, as well improbable, that the Supream God, out of his Wisdom and Goodness, should leave the City of this World, from the beginning, destitute of Laws, by which it should be Governed; in regard, no Man lays the Foundation of a Republick, or City, without making Laws. For this Reason, they held, that in the Heaven, and fix'd Stars more especially, and in some Measure, in the Elements themselves, and all Universal Nature; there was a certain Divine Law, Fate, or Order, establish'd, from which the Immutable, and Eternal Counsel of the Supream God, neither ever did, did, or would recede. Amongst these Laws, were the Periods of the Beginning and End of things; they also afforded means, to enable us to live pleafantly here, and to attain a better Life hereaster; that there were Rewards for the Good, and Punishments for the Bad, and many other things, which may be acquired by the constant Observation of things. In short, what things soever have an Analogy and Agreement together, may constantly be reduc'd to those Eternal Laws: When the Supream God had settled and established these, he made the World, but he made a good Number of other Super-celestial Deities before all Ages.

All Mundane things, that are subject to various and irregular Changes, and are comprehended under no certain Method, were managed by the Sun, Moon, and other Planets; wherefore the Heathens were of Opinion, that Mortal Men ought to pay them Adoration beyond the other Stars. The most profound Philosophers held, that all compound Beings, that were partly Immutable, and partly fubject to Change, were Govern'd by the various Conjunction of the fix'd Stars and Planets. Here also the Operations of the Elements, fell under their Speculation, fo that at last they Worship'd them, and the whole World. Then some Heroes, whose Merits had Advanc'd them to Heaven, were by the appointment of the Supream God, made, not only Presidents and Judges of all Humane Affairs (especially of those that depended on Mans's Will) but Patrons, and Mediators, to whom they should direct their Prayers, being (by God's Permission) able, sufficiently to take Care of Particulars: For the Antients thought it very absurd, that the Bleffed God should have any regard to Particulars (unless as they are contain'd in their Gents and Species) and esteem'd it more

Ct

ma

thi

pu

wl

OII

Go

Na

Ele

In

to

Pri

we

en

cip

God

ani

the

COL

Ca

COI

hot

fro

Di

En

or

by

tain

and it v

COI

tue

Sup

and Hu

cer

more agreeable, to suppose, that the Supream God committed the Administration of Particulars to Men that had led exemplary Lives; whom therefore the Priest said, ought to be made Propitious by Sacrifices. And in fine, the Subcelestial Deities, as Demons, Lares, Lemures, and others, mention'd before, being of an Ancipitous Nature, to be Worship'd with Sacrifices, and many other Rites, that they might do no Mischies; it being Man's Interest, as much to avert Evil, as to procure Good to himself. They thought it a most unworthy Affront of the most Good and Great God, to make him the Author of the Evil that befel us, unless when his Justice inslicted it on Sinners.

I shall say something, in short, concerning these things; having before spoken more at large, tho' I could wish, that some more Judicious Pen were employ'd on this Subject; neither my Age nor Leisure permitting me to descend to all the minute Particulars of the Religion of the Heathens: Not that I want some to Apologize for what I have already said, but that their Errors being discover'd, the most excellent Parts might appear in their true Light; for that Religion could not be destitute of a true solid Foundation, which slourished for so many Ages, and grew fo very extensive.

The Histories or Fables of the Heathenish Gods, are known to and exploded by the very Boys; but I conceive that the most sagacious Men, do not throughly apprehend the Principles and Causes, from whence the whole Fabrick of their Religion did at first procede; give me leave therefore, to attempt something on this difficult Subject. And first, when they say, that the Supream God, from the beginning, did establish a certain Divine Law, Fate, or constant or natural Order of things, that I think is mani-

m

13

m

1-

i-

n-

to es,

n's

re

hy

ke

ess

efe I

mire

cu-

int

out

el-

for lid

es,

ods.

ut I

not

fes,

did

npt

nen

ng,

on-

k is

ni-

manifeffly apparent, must be understood of all those things that act Necessarily, and by a Natural Impulse. There is not the least Semblance of Reason, why all such Actions as those, should simply depend on the fix'd Stars, or Elements themselves, in regard God may implant something in the form of every Natural thing; very different from the Celestial or Elementary Nature, that is only proper to this or that Individual or Species; and I am the more inclin'd to be of this Opinion, because that some particular Principles are inscrib'd in Mens Consciences, as well as Understandings, which no other Animals enjoy in common with them : So that if those Principles are immediately deriv'd from the Supream God, rather than by the Mediation of the Heaven and fixed Stars; Man being a most eminent part of the Creation; there will be no occasion to have recourse to the Heaven, or fixed Stars, for the first Causes of Natural things, that are regular and constant:

Thus much I do acknowledge, that the chief, if hot the next Cause of all such things does proceed from the Heaven and fixed Stars. But whether the Divine Laws, with respect to the Beginning and End of things, are written in the Heaven and Stars, or whether they have any influence over the means, by which Food and Raiment is provided; and contain the fecret Decrees concerning Eternal Rewards and Punishments, to me is altogether a Mystery; tho it will still be the same thing when Means are fitly connex d with the End; whether Rewards for Virtue, and Punishments for Vice, were Decreed by the Supream God, before all Ages, or in subsequent Times, and daily, according to the particular Emergency of Humane Actions, in regard, the thing it felf will certainly prove true,

Aaz

Now.

Now, as God doth not here regard Necessary as Voluntary Actions, but from them only, makes a Judgment of Men; therefore I do infer the Causes of Rewards and Punishments from the Eternal Decrees of God (tho' not those written in the Heaven and Stars) in regard, nothing can be conceived more worthy of the most Wife and Great God, than that he should establish all those things from Eternity, that might be done without violating the Freedom of Man's Will (which Character of Divine Infinity is imprinted in Man); or, which is much at one, that he should bestow Rewards and Punishments on Men, as if they were Decreed to them from all Eternity. For to what purpose do Men make devout Prayers, if the Laws for Rewarding Virtue, and Punishing Vice, were fix'd and confirm'd from all Eternicy? If devout Prayers are accounted amongst the Means, by which we attain Eternal Happiness; Virtue will be Rewarded but by the Intervention of Prayers, left Virtuous Men should grow Proud and Arrogant, and over-value themselves. For the same Reason also, God by his Eternal Decree, requires Repentance or Internal Sorrow for Sin, to make Men Humble; and all other things which keep us within the Bounds of our Duty; fo that it is the fame thing, when Mortal Man had made use of the right Means, whether Eternal Happiness were Decreed him from all Eternity, for his Virtue, Piety, or Faith, or whether he obtain'd them every Day by his Prayers; for Man will equally possess the Fruition of his Defires, as if he did daily incline God to new and fudden Determinations.

This Opinion of God's establishing his Laws from the beginning of the World, obtained only amongst the Learned, because they could not otherwise apprehend how God could be free from Care, and So-

lace

r

V

d

N

C

tl

b

C

t

lace himself in his own Blessed State: It was sufficient to know, that God formerly had afforded them proper Means, which they ought to embrace, and make use of, in order to live Well and Happy. They never debated the question, whether, what they obtained from the Gods, was Decreed them from the beginning, or was the effect of fresh Counsels. It could neither be positively deny'd, nor prov'd, that the Supream God from all Eternity, had some Supercelestial Deities Associates with him in his Happiness; it seeming more probable to them that it should be so, than that in succeeding Times he should Advance miserable Men into that blessed State. They also called that Tranquillity only, which a Person enjoy'd with respect to himself: none could be accounted Happy, or Blessed, but with reference to many.

d

e

it

of is

e, n

E-

end

all

gft

5;

ot

nd

me

res

ike

us

the

the

De-

ty,

ay

ru-

l to

'om

ngst

ap-

So-

lace

It would feem more probable, that the Exotick Motions of all things, should depend on the different Aspects and Motions of the Planets, if it were fatisfactorily prov'd, that the Causes of those things, which move constantly and regularly, did depend on the fixed Stars; but more especially, if the various Configurations of the fixed Stars and Planets, did influence those things, which are subject to some Mutations. It is very difficult to conclude any thing in fo abstruse a Matter, tho' I must ingenuously confess, their Opinion seems so probable to me, that I do not think any more agreeable Caufe can be affigned for those things, by the Affistance of common Reason only. But, I do here affert, that to attribute a proper Worship (which must be simply Divine) to the fixed Stars or Planets, is a most egregious Error; fo that unless the Worship of the Supream God, were Symbolical; first of him in the Stars, then the Stars in the Heroes, and the Heroes in Aa 3

Nor will it be any Argument to say, that both the East and West-Indies, for the most part, at this very Day, Worship the Sun, Moon, Stars, Heaven and Elements, for they strike Veneration into a New Born Child. Tho' God is visible in all the singular Parts of the World; yet the Supream God is most particularly evident in them all join'd together, and therefore the parts ought not to be Worshipp'd; for Adoration can safely be paid to the Supream God alone. It seems very incongruous to me, that the Heathens should pay such Religious Worship tot he Planets, rather than the Heaven and fixed Stars, when they believ'd that inexorable Fate to be written in them, but perhaps, they thought by that means to

to

fc

th

0

P

e

th

th

at

th

te

al

th

di

10

W

0 ar

th

th

th

prevail upon them.

Now, in regard the Heathens, perceiv'd, that many things here necessarily proceeded, not only from the Heaven, the fixed Stars and Planets, and Elements, but from some Inferiour Principles; therefore they concluded the whole World ought to be Worship'd; and here I must determine, as I did before, that unless this Worship was Symbolical, it is grossy Erroneous. There are many Reasons which are mention'd before, to prove, that this Worship is Symbolical; but I leave my Reader to his own Judgment, to determine as he pleases. That all things here, do not fimply depend on the Heaven, fix'd Stars, Planets, or Elements; but something on the Free Will, which God of his singular Goodness, has been pleas'd to bestow upon Mankind, is not only confentaneous to right Reason, but may be prov'd from Internal Sense. It is from this Will, inclin'd either to Good or Evil, that the Supream God makes his Judgment of Mankind; and the Evil of Punishment proceeds from the former Principles (by the intervention of Divine vine Justice;) Man's Free Will only is the Original of the Evil of Crimes.

But that the Heroes of the Heathens that were mounted to Heaven, were constituted Presidents. Patrons, or Mediators of those Actions, that Originally spring from Man's Free Will, done in this Life, and Judges of them hereafter, (which is an Opinion, not much unlike what is generally received now a days; for they in these latter Ages, attribute the fame Power and Office to the Souls of the Bleffed in Heaven, as the Heathens did formerly to their Heroes) is a meer conjecture, being neither founded on any folid Reason, or credible Experience. What Author is there, tells us, that any of them were so prevail'd on, by the Prayers of some of the Antients, that they return'd an immediate Answer, to their Petitions? Now, if devout Supplicants did ask those things, which according to the prescriptions of the Eternal Law, were just and equitable, they succeeded; but if on the contrary, their Addresses prov'd Fruitless. It was in vain for them to pierce Heaven with their Cries, and expect the most Artificial Eloquence could be successful. and prevail for those things which the Supream God thought unjustly requested, and not fit to be gran-Wherefore, tho' Prayers were appointed from all Eternity, for the accomplishing our Defires, yet they cannot alter the Eternal Counfels of God, or divert his Judgments.

The Heathers here may Answer, that God is always Happy and Free from the Care of Particulars (unless, as they are contain'd in Genus and Species) and bestow'd this Province from the beginning, on those Heroes that deserv'd well; who will not slight the Prayers of Mortals so much, as not to procure them a savourable Answer from some Superiour

Aa4

Deity.

Deity. And in so ambiguous a Matter, there cannot be found a better Expedient, than that the Supream God should constitute some Men, the Patrons, or Judges of others; and their Heroes drawing the Certainty of their Opinions from the Eternal Law. could not be deceiv'd themselves, or deceive others. This is but a very weak proof of the Doctrine of the Heathens, who can have no intimate Knowledge of the Nature of God, and our narrow Capacity is altogether uncapable of judging what is agreeable to his Bleffed Nature and Providence. But, if their former Opinions of the Bleffedness of the Supream God, and his being quite free from Care, and also concerning the Heaven, Stars, and Elements, had been firm and valid; this Opinion also, might have followed by a natural confequence, tho' I determine nothing, only fay, that the Premises consider'd, they thought they had good grounds for their Opinion.

Antiquity hath Handed down to us, were worthy of this Employment, it being notoriously known, how many Villainous things were committed by them, and yet they did affirm, that the Supream God, after their Sins were Pardoned, and they were Deisied, had committed this Judicial Power to their Heroes, to use, as occasion required, as much as the fixed and Eternal Laws, to the Heaven and Stars.

It may here be Answered, that the their Heroes did obtain Heaven thro' the Remission of their Sins, yet that did not give them the Character of the best of Men. For, who would not laugh at many things done by their Jupiter, Mercury, Venus, and other Deities, and condemn others? Here again, it will be retorted amongst the many Jupiters, Mercuries, and

Venus's

OI

th

M

th

an

15

an

m du

10

N

fu

Pu

га

fu

H

re

H

th

ha

tra

in

ne

th

W.

tal

ve

GI

to 10

an

pre

Venus's, which antiently were had in Veneration. the Priests endeavour'd to expose and ridicule, those of all other Foreign Countries; by a Poetical or Sacerdotal License, reproaching them with all those things they had done whilst they they were Men here on Earth, tho' they were exalted amongst the Gods. This was return'd them again by the Priefts, and scurrilous Wits on the other side; so that there is no diffinct or genuine History of their Gods extant. amongst the Heathers; tho', according to the common Vogue of all Men, Those times did not produce any Persons more celebrated for their Merit, or more deferving all kind of Inferiour Adoration. Now, suppose this were true, why did they not fuppress those fabulous Stories, by some Law, or Publick Edict, lest Mortal Men should be encourag'd by their Examples, and take the greater Pleafure and Solace in Vice? Why were not those Histories expunged out of the World, which brought reproach upon the Gods and Men? Then, fay the Heathens, there was some Allegorical Meaning in those Antient Fables, whose Exposition was to be had from the Prieft. Here I shall not much contradict them, for they could not be fo ridiculous, infatuated, or abfurd, but that they suppos'd a Kernel of Truth under those fabulous Shells. But yet, they will hardly be excus'd from this, that, what was worthy being known, ought to be publickly taught, tho' the Priests oppos'd it.

e

1,

y

1,

y

793

y

er

ch

nd

oes

ns,

eft

ngs dei-

be

ind is's, The Heathers also will say, That there are many very Excellent Things in their Religion, and most Glorious Things related of their Gods; these ought to be believed, the other Things are left as doubtful, or credited only on the Authority of the High Priest and Sacerdotal College, The Priests endeavour to prove it thus: We ought to believe whatever is de-

liver'd liver'd to us by Credible Persons concerning those Things that have been transacted in any sormer Age, tho they may appear wonderful. The Judgment of Man is ignorant and rash, to reject those Things as salse, that probably might be, and redound to the Glory of the Supream GOD. That Credit is due to Prophane Histories, but we should 70

01 gi

th

afi

th

th

W

di

N.

7990

OC

inc

tie

bei

the

Sta

Sy

in I

ma

ties

An

diff

more firmly adhere to Divine.

These Herculean Arguments of theirs had this Effeet upon me, that I not only made a diligent Search in all the Authors I could any where procure, for all the common Events, as well as Miracles; which might advance the Glory of the Supream GOD. But finding the Sacred Histories of the Antients just like Fables; their Traditions still more obscure and doubtful; their Revelation nothing but Fantoms, and the Vain Imaginations of their Priests, lying in the Temple between Sleep and Waking; their Oracles and all these forts of Fictions, deriv'd their Authority only from the fingle Testimony of some Priest; I could not find any thing to folid, on which one fingle Article of Faith could be built, or that the Heathers need depart from the least Particle, which was deducible from Common and Right Reason.

I must here acknowledge that their Doctrine about those that were Heroes in Reality, is not so harsh and strange, but contains some Things Noble and Eximious. For they did not suppose them to be idle, and wholly engaged in Self-contemplation, or useless Parts of the World, and negligent of the Affairs of Mankind, from whom they originally sprang; but were constantly employed about such Things, as were most agreeable to their own Natures, and grateful to the Gods and Men. In short, I could scarce find a more useful Opinion of what seem'd feem'd more probable amongst them, if their Old Women, Poets, and Priests had kept themselves within any tolerable Bounds in relating their Histories. By this they establish d the Doctrine of the Immortality of the Soul, and Rewards for Virtue.

Now if all that the Heathens reported of their Heroes were true, they still were of opinion that they ought to pray unto the Supream GOD only. They did not think it probable, that he had committed the Care of Particulars to Heroes or others, fo as to rob himself of his just Honour and Glory, or permit any other to be invoked besides himself. Therefore tho' the Affairs of Mortals were committed to those Heroes, they were of opinion that Prayers and Thanksgiving were due to the Supream GOD only. It must not be laid to the Priefts Charge, that Heroes after this Life were called by the Names of Stars, or Stars after their Names, but to the Sorrow and Flattery of the People, or the Ambtions of their Successors; tho it proved a very great Incitement to Virtue. For what will not a Man attempt that is Excellent tho' difficult, that believes not only his Head, but his Name shall be placed amongst the Stars. The Homonymous Names of Heroes and Stars have been the occasion of great Mistakes amongst those that are but indifferently conversant in the Doctrines of the Antients; but I cannot here infift on them. For they being ignorant that the Stars were worship'd under the Names of Men, and Men by the Names of the Stars, and imagining that their Worship was not Symbolical, but principally and properly terminated in themselves, the Scielists imposed upon themselves many ways: this prodigious Flattery, tho' very antient and common, yet was the Effect of intolerable Ambition, and very indecorous; tho' I cannot much diflike the Antients for paying Heroical Honours, because

t

t

0

e

0 n,

10

ly

ch

art,

at

id

because it afforded Men such encouraging Arguments to Virtue.

That the Heathens endeavour'd to make some Dei. ties, especially the Subcelestial, propitious to them, by Sacrifices and other Rites, imagining their Corporeal Nature might want Supplies; and being of an Amhpibious Nature, fometimes propense to Good. times to Evil, according their different inclinations to Mankind, tho' this were done with all imaginable Caution, lest they should be injurious to them; yet it was the highest Affront to the Majesty of the most Good and Great God; as if he could not or would not fufficiently Protect and Defend his own. How base and ignominious is it for him that Fights under the Banner of the most Good and Great God. to defert to another? And what is there can hurt a Man, that doth not proceed from himself? He that doth not entertain Wicked and deprav'd Thoughts, drives the Demons from him; nothing is, or can be done by them, but by Divine Permission, and the Fault is entirely owing to our felves.

This is a very ridiculous Opinion, for who can demonstrate, that there ever was any such Intercourse between these sorts of Deities, or Demons, and Mankind? And should it be granted, that some of them do assume Bodies of Air; yet whoever saw them? Or when did any of them visibly Attack any Man? I do not deny, but the Air, Ather, and and Celestial Orbs, have Inhabitants; but must freely own my Ignorance, of what Nature they are, and how they may be made Propitious; but this I am sure of, he that leads a Pious and Religious Life, need not be afraid of any Demon.

The Sacrifices of the Antients, may justly be accounted amongst the subtle Inventions of the Priests; either, that they might Convert them to their own use.

use, or to load the People with Religious Forms and Ceremonies: For they made Feasts of them for the generality, and according to the number of the Sacrifices of the High Priest, order'd a parcel of notable Trencher-Men to take Care of them, as we have it in Livy and Cicero, and an Antient Inscription mention'd by Choul.

į.

y

al

i,

ens

a-

1;

ne

10

n.

ats

od,

a

at

ts,

be

he can

er-

ons,

me

aw

ack

and

ely

and

am

ife,

ac-

fts;

nwe

ufe,

So much for the Diversity of Worship amongst the Gentiles, and the Causes of it; as far as I can gather from their Writings, which remain. I will conclude with a Place in Varro, in regard, it will afford some light to what was said before. There are three kinds of Theology, Mystical, Natural and Civil. Mystical, is that used by the Poets; the Natural, by Philosophers; and the Civil, by the People. The first contains many fictitious things against the Dignity and Nature of Immortal Beings, For they say, one God was born out of an Head, another out of a Thigh, and a third out of drops of Blood. They also tell us, that the Gods were Thieves, Adulterers, and Servants to Men; and make them Guilty of what, not only Men in general, but the most abject and contemptible amongst them are. The second kind is that which I have demonstrated, of which the Philosophers have left many Books; in which they shew, who are Gods, where they are, of what kind, what time they began to be, or whether they were Eternal. Whether from Fire, according to Heraclitus, from Numbers, as Pythagoras, or Atoms, as Epicurus teaches us; and many other things, which better became the Schools than the Court. The third, which is the Civil; the Citizens, and Priests especially, ought to Understand, and Perform; this contains what Gods ought to be Worshipped publickly, and what Rites and Sacrifices are to be Performed by every one. The first is most accommodated to the Theatre, the second to the whole World, the third to the City. a conteq ei ginne From

From this of Varro, as also the Opinion of Plato, and the Platonist's before recited, it appears that the Religion of the Heathens was compiled partly, from sound and solid Reason, partly from the Mysterious Fables of the Poets, and partly from the Inventions of the Priests; and having already treated of the two sormer. I proceed to say something of the last:

But in regard it would require a whole Volume to handle them at large; and because the most principal Parts of their Rites have been discours'd of already, I shall not insist long upon them; but my Opinion is that they are of no greater Validity, than their Faith or Fables; for they seem to promote nothing less than an awful and reverential Fear of Divine Justice, and a grateful Commemoration of Divine Mercy. Those Rites tended more to an external Pageantry than the Honour of the Supream God, they debauch'd the Minds of Men from the internal Worship of God, sometimes to a magnificent Pomp, and at others to meer empty Ceremonies, to the overthrow of True and Sound Religion.

Thus their Feasts, Sports and Shows, that were instituted by the Pontifex, of Sacerdotal Order, did withdraw the People from the pure and true Worship of God; the I cannot attribute that so much to the Design of the Priests, as the Policy of the Magistrate; for Cicero lib. 2. de Attic. says, the Sense of the People is best seen by the Theater and publick Shows. But in regard the Heathens have every where been reproach'd with Idolatry and Superstition. I shall say something concerning it; for the better understanding whereof I must premise, that there is a twofold Error concerning religious Worship, viz.

(1.) Where the true God is worshipped after a false Manner.

(2.) Where true Worship is paid to a false God!

The

n

1

C

01

in

m

D

W

ar

th

th

tic

The first is Superstition, and the second Idolatry. I shall treat of them both.

Aquinas lays, Superstition is a Vice opposite to Religion in the Exces, Tho' whatsoever vitiates, destroys, obscures or Pervers the pure Worship of God, is properly Superstition; in which Acceptation of the Word not only the Heathens in former Times, but a numerous Society of Men now a-days are guilty of it? For they contended for and disputed about very many things which are not necessary to Salvation. The Women, as well as the Priests, formerly were very instrumentalin the in troducing of Superstition; and Strabo out of Menander, fays, it was feldom feen that any fingle Man was adicted to Superstition; tho' I cannot blame the Women fo much as the Heathers Priests, who Bullinger says were Wicked Wretches, Vain, Covetous, nay very Villains. For had not the Priests fell in with, encouraged and promoted, those Feminine Superstitions, they had never been fo Predominant; which grew fo common at last, that not only the Heathens but the Jews, according to the Opinion of some, were corrupted by them: There being many things commanded and forbidden by their Ceremonial Law, for which no rational Account can be rendered. And not only Quintilian makes mention of the Jewish Superstition, but many other antient Authors, as may be feen in their Writ-Cicero speaking of Superstition says, it being dispersed thro' the Nation, had oppressed the Minds of most Men. Again T. Aquinas says, Idolatry is the Divine Worship of a Creature, or Latreia; but especially when it is exhibited to an Idol or the Similitude of any thing. So that had not their Worship been rather Proper than Symbolical, and Divine rather than fuch as was due to Heroes, according to his Notion the Heathens had not been simply guilty of IdoIt is evident from antient Authors, and Tertullian himself consesses, that Idolatry was not very Old or Universal amongst the Heathers. Varro says the Romans worshipped the Gods without Images for more than an Hundred and Seventy Years, which is it had still continu'd says the same Author, The Worship of the Gods had been more pure. Then adds, They that first set up the Images of the Gods for the People taught them to be searless, and drew them into Error.

The most antient Temples amongst the Egyptians were without Statues or Images; as I noted before. Herodotus and Strabo fay, the Persians had neither Temples nor Images. Eusebius tells us the Affurians published an Order against the Adoration of Idols. 'Twas in latter Ages therefore that the Worthip of Images or Idols crept into the World, and that not every where; but whether it proceeded from the Excellency and Ingenuity of the Artificers, which drew Wonder and Admiration, which by degrees grew into a fort of Religion, especially when any thing very strange and remarkable was reported concerning it: The publick Honour and Veneration that Men had for those that had deserved well of their own Country or Mankind in general: or the private Duty and Respect that Children and Grandchildren had for their Progenitors: Or fome Fathers, &c. for their Off-spring; or any other Cause, I shall not here determine.

There are many other things in the Religion of the Heathers, which the Moderns tax as Superfittions and Idolatrous, which I have treated of before a which if the Learned Reader does not esteem sufficient, I must leave him to his own Judgment in the Matter. Tho' I desire him always to observe that many things which we call Superstitions, were intended by them only to significe the mystical and occult

Adoration

ef

in

ma

Di

We Pri

in

and

bei

a p

Ser

fore

and

far Mir

ver'

mor

adhe

Philo

to S

and

lecte perft

N

cacio that

mof

for a

fond

Adoration of some unknown Deity; and others we esteem Idolatrous, were a Smybolical way of Woshiping the Supream God.

d

d

d

e

15

of

ùs

fi-

he

at

ult on

It is very Notorious, that the Heathens fell into many gross Errors; especially, when they Decreed Divine Honours to their Emperours; some of whom were the worst of Men, and instituted an Order of Priests, who were called by their Names, as was done in the times of Augustus, Helvius, Antoninus, Aurelius, and Faustina. Nor is it any thing strange, that they should have Priests called by their Names; there being an Antient Law, that all the Gods should have a particular Order of Priests appointed for their Service. Cicero lib. 2. de Leg. Thus (as I hinted before) as Superflition formerly overthrew the true and pure Religion; Flattery, undermin'd it; for the Credulity of the People was fo great, that they were far more inclin'd to Embrace and Imprint on their Minds, as indubitable Truths, whatever was deliver'd them from the Senate or High Priest; than to examine into, or controvert them; effeeming it more fafe, to Err with their Superiours, than to adhere to the found and folid Doctrines of the Philosophers, who were always profess'd Enemies to Superstitious Worship: Thus, the most pure and chafte Parts of Divine Worship being neglected, all Religion degenerated by degrees into Superstition.

Nor did any thing found and solid remain, besides their Laws, unless amongst some of the most perspicacious, who still discern'd our five Articles amidst that vast heap of Rubbish, in which they were almost Buried: The Heathers were not to be reclaim'd, for at that time, they were so propense to Sin, and sond of Error, that all the Law could do, was only

BB fuffici-

fufficent to deter them from the most flagitious and notorious Crimes.

Now, as an Universal Religion may be compiled out of our five Articles, so in their nasty Sink of Errors, no Religion was to be sound, to correct their Mistakes, and reduce them into the true Path. Mucius Scavola, Pont. Max. and Varro, endeavoured to rectifie some things in Religion, particularly to explode their Fables. The Emperour Julian, attempted to Purge their Religion from its Dross, and Weed out its most rank Errors, but in vain, they had taken too deep Root. Almost all the Platonick and Stoick Philosophers in those days, strove to reduce all Religion to Virtue and Piety, towards God, and Men; as it is to be seen in their Works, where proper Remedies are applied against the Epidemical Distempers of the Times.

But the Christians in that Age, either extracting or confirming, better and more facred Doctrines, than those of the Philosophers; the rest of the Religion of the Heathens, was left a meer Caput Mortuum, dry and useless, and so Expir'd. The Chrifians enjoyning the Practice of Virtue, and Purity of Life to their Followers, there could be no other Parts of the old Religion remaining, but what was the subject of Raillery to the Fathers of the Church. By their means, other Articles were substituted in the room of the former, which gain's Belief, but very flowly for fome Ages; but at last they obtain'd, and are very Universal at this time; the Hierarchy also remain'd where the Authority in facred Matters was: But I shall handle this Subject more at large, if God afford me Life and Health.

By

P

マイココ

Shop

on 1

V

h

P

10

I

e

O

t

9

d

tc

æ

10

1-

T-

ur

its ut

11-

se

nd

en

ap-

the

ing

ies,

Re-

107-bri-

Fity

ther

Was

rch.

l in

but

ob-

the n fa-

Sub-

and

By

By what I have faid, I hope it does appear, That the Philosophical Opinions of the Heathers, concerning some Eternal Laws that were written in Heaven and the fix'd Stars, as also in the Planets and Elements; carried so much Verisimilitude in them, that a more eminently agreeable Doctrine could hardly be found by the dictate of common Reason; tho' it was next to impossible, to explain, what those Laws were: Notwithstanding it was impious to pay a Proper Worship to the Heaven, Stars and Elements. Those Heroes, who were admitted into Heaven, had cognizance of particulars; especially, the Actions of Men, that the Supream God might be freed from Care and Trouble, may feem very probable from what has been premised; but it cannot from thence be inferr'd, that Prayers should be put up to any besides him; or that Heroes had the direction of particulars committed to them from the beginning.

As to the Adoration of the Subcelestial Gods, that they might not be Injurious to them, it is a very great Affront to the Divine Majesty; as if he wanted either Will or Power, to Defend and Protect them; and Men could not be fecure, unless they were in League with those inferiour Deities. Whatfoever favours of Superstition, and Idolatry, ought to be expunged, rather than to endeavour to Solve it by a favourable Interpretation.

Those five Articles which are extracted out of the Religion and Laws of the Heathens; ought to be accounted the most proper means for obtaining a better Life. Their Errors therefore, which carried fuch Contention, and confifted in fome Pables and Fictions, which their Priefts endeavoured deavoured to cajole them into the Belief of, and certain ridiculous Rites and Ceremonies, which were Forged on the fame Anvil, ought to be

B 5 2

To conclude this Volume, I freely fubmit my felf to the Censure and Judgment of the Catholick and Orthodox Church; but not to the impetuous Enemies of Universal Divine Providence, and the Publick Peace.

Those Mark the Mark Those Mark to the Mark distinguity throughous dead, cognication of particuand the could have stone of the thing that and the comment of th Bandle advector and to a set a Paul confidence a main solution which on our construction in the construction with LA DEUTATE COM-

Forth House Discovinged) of the Spotunger or removing the consequence bns onsted to the board of the इ.स. में स्वास्ता ल care account of a survey of a street than to ong construction to the construction of the to our excounted the most proper means-for obcaming actions to Chem Fires therefore, which carried inch . acquion, and confilled in -ne effort west than a design of the control of the

An INDEX of the Chief Matters contained in the foregoing Discourse.

A

	Charles and the contract of th A BSTINENCE from Eating Flesh	is'd among the f- Gentiles,	Page 358
Acca Laurentia, Nurse to Romulus and	Remus, p. 170
why Sacrifices were performed sublickly to	her ibid Her Holy-days called Laurentalia.	ibid.
Holy-days called Laurentalia, Adonai, one of the Names of God us'd in Script	ure. p. 28 from whence derived,	ibid.
Adonis, Worshipped by the Asyrians, p. 28 cal the Poenicians, p. 29 after what what manner	the People were to Worship him, p. 29, 30 taken for Bacch	ue by Plutarch.
p. 30 whether the Sun be meant by him, ibid. of	r Corn &c ibid
Egyptians, first appointed Temples, Groves, and	Colemn Affemblies for the Worship of the Stars, p. 13 and	Oracles Ceremonies, Shrines, Altars, &c. paid to them, p	tos they first divided the Year into twelve Months,	ibid:
Esculapius, his Worship, p. 170 advanced amo	ong the Die Iv.
Agamemnon, Worship'd by the Grecians.
Agamemnon, World of the Greetans.	p. 101 Air, what persuaded to its Worship, and t it, p. 19 Anaximenes, Diogones, Apollionates an	d others, endeavour to defend its Divinity, p. 20 the comm	non Opinion of its Substance examin'd, p. 125 it was esteem'd	a Deity among the Antient Philosophers, p. 127. also amon ibid.
Alms, practifed by the Heathens,	P.359
Ambarval Sacrifices, why so called,	p. 323
Amburbian Kites, what they were,	mentagrito de abra.
Ammon, his Temple and Image,	p. 45
Amburbian Rites, what they were, Ammon, his Temple and Image, Amphictyon, plac'd among the Stars, and called	the Carter, from nis invention of Garrs.	D. 132
Anaitis, a Name of the Moon, p. 56 she Worshi	pped among the Persians, Babylonians, Medes, Parthians, and	Armenians, ibid.
facred Rites instituted in Honour of her, and	of their Agreement with the Saiurnalia,	ibid.
Bb a	Antinous,

Antenous, had Divine Honours paid him, p. 176 Aphrodite, see Venus, Apollo, Plato, thew's to be the Sun, p. 47 the facred Rites and Sports instituted in Honour of him, p. 48 was Worshipped with Jupiter, p. 204 the Delphick Temple and Oracle, ibid.
his several Sirnames, p. 205 Augustus built him a magnificent Temple in the Palatine, ibid. What Birds, Beafts and Trees.	E were facred to him, p. 206 Avabians, worshipped the Moon, p. 56 whether by the Name Alilat. ibid
Areas and Califto, advanced to the Stars by the Areadians, p. 181 Aries, the same with Jupiter Hammon, p. 83 the Peruvians Wor thip it; p. 80 Articles (five) which the whole Would ought to receive a undoubted Truths, p. 3 & 38	5
Aftarte, why her Image had Horns, p. 54 Aftaroth of the Hebrews	, ibid. Solomen faid to have built a Temple for her, p. 54 Re	- presented by a Figure, part Humane, part Fish, ibid. the $1 rians call Venus by this Name, ibit Avergatis, after what manner the Priests Worship'd her, p. 14	0
The fignifies the Earth, p. 141 the was Queen of Syria, ibid the Prohibited the Eating of Fish, ibid	1 Atlantes, a People of Africa, cursed the Sun, p. 4 Averranci Dii, Worship'd that they might not hurt, p. 24 Augurs, made their Auguries from Winds, Dreams, Prodigie Oracles and Wonders, p. 362 present at the Sanction of a	No.
Laws, and Creation of Magistrates, ibis	1 Augusta, had Divine Honours paid her, p. 17	5 Augustus, see Cesar, Monte Coppet and San Satura B are or posterior for the same and the Acchus, formerly called Priapus, p 226 the Inventer of th	e Vine and making Wine, p.222 his various Names, ibid	à.
Sometimes clothed in Womens Habit, 223 Whether the fam	ie with Moses, ibid. his Sirnames, ibid. the Scythians rejected h Feafts, p. 225 Worship at the same Altar with Proferpine, ibi his Temple and Shrine, ibid. esteemed the Captain of the	ie Muses, ibid. the first that rode in triumph on an Elephant, ibi	1 his Companions;
	0.00
Baalpeor, Worship'd in Arabia, p. 40 the same with Priapus, ibi Beafts of several forts worship'd by the Antients p. 2	E0.50
Bees, produc'd from Oxen, p. 62 their Industry, ibi	1000 Beelphegor, his Worship among the Moabites very obscene, p. 4 the Women fond of it Bellona, her Temple and Priests, p. 213 how much esteemed t the Cappadocians; ibid. her Statue Berecynthia; fee Rhea	150
· 解析的 是 1879 - "" "" "" "" "" "" "" "" "" "" "" "" ""	14

Bedies, of the more Parts and Members compos'd the more weak and debile Esars, Julius Cesar translated among the Gods after his Death, p. 173. Augustus had a Temple and Divine Honours decreed him Carmenta, whence so called, and its fignification, p. 168 worship'd by the Romans, p. 169. her Altar, Temple and Sacri-Carthaginians us'd to offer Humane Sacrifices to Saturn, p. 46 Caftor and Pollux, their Temple and facred Rites P. 169 Gerberus, reported by some to have three Heads; Hefied says he had fifty, Horace, an hundred Ceremonies of the Gentiles, ridiculous and mad, p. 1. & fegq. at Deifying their Emperours P. 173 Ceres, Worship'd by the Greeks and Romans,. her Names, p. 227 her Temple and Shrine, p. 228 facred Rights were performed to her and Proserpine every Year by the Athenians, ibid. the Goods of all those that resisted the Magistrates, were Confilcated and Dedicated to her, ibid. her abstemious Rites perform'd by Women only, ibid. her facred Rites observed among the Eleusynians, ibid. her Effigies at Cidonia, ibid. the Ceremonies to her, ibid. the Argadians had her VVorship in mighty elteem, p. 230 she had a very large Statue of Marble, ibid. Wine forbidden at he Sacrifices, ibid, her Victims, ibid. another Statue of her Chaftity, a Goddels among the Romans, 306 known by two Titles, Patrician and Plebeian, ibid. Temples of both, Cinnamon, facred to the Sun among the Ethiopians, p. 45 the Art of Gathering it ibid. Ciun, of the Arabians, the same with the Moon vine Honours paid by the Antients, p. 304 her Effigies, ibid. how Aristides Represented her ibid. her Power, ibid. several Temples dedicated to her at Rome, ibid. her Image publickly erected, Conjugal Deities, who they were, p. 306 Conjugal Chaftity, see Chastity. Codrus, worship'd as a God, for his service to his Country p. 182 Compitalia, what they are P. 240 Conscience, the signs of a good and bad one, p. 329 it had two Names among the Greeks, p. 331 common Principles written in the Conscience by the Universal Wisdom, ibid, Fame may deceive us, Conscience never can, ibid. it is the greatest comfort to the Good, and greatest torment to the Wicked, B b 4 p. 331, 332

r,

y-

d.

0

d. d.

16

45

es,

111

id.

75

he

id. me his bid.

the

bid.

bid.

bid.

. 21

ibid.

42:

ibi4.

d by

ibid.

dies,

Constantine the Great, almost abolish'd the Gentile Superstition, p. 13 the manner how he was Deisied p. 175 Corybantes, Priests of the Great Mother, p. 154. Why so called, ibid. Crimes, how expiated by the Vannus, of which the Holy Scripture makes mention; was attributed to Fao by the Heathens p. 27. Cupid assists Love, p. 220 had no Temple but in the Heart, ibid. Cybele, see Rhea

De Emons, what the antient Philosophers thought of them, p. 267 they were endued with several Qualities p. 278 Biana, hardly appeared, but with Humane Sacrifices, p. 207 her Shrine, ibid. her Rites, p. 208 believed to preside over Women in Travail, ibid. her several Names, ibid. her Temple on the Avenine Mount, ibid. but the most samous, that at Ephesus p. 209

Agle, facred to Jupiter p. 199 East, from whence all Religion proceeded p. 15 Earth, worship'd by the Antients, p. 17 the Philosophers gave it the first place among the Elements, ibid. called the Old Mother, ibid. Worship'd by the Phrygians, under the Names of Rhea and Cybele, p. 150 their several Names, ibid. & seqq. her Worship and Image describ'd at large by Varro, p. 153 & seqq. El, on of the ten Names of God Elements, their Worship, p. 104 not only Arithmetical, but Geometrical Proportion attributed to them, p. 106 the Egyptians made two of each of them Elohim, a Name of GOD, with its various fignifications p. 26 Emperors Deified, and who they were Evander, invented the Greek Letters, and Musical Instruments, the Harp, Triangles and Sports, and Establish'd Laws, p. 169 had Honours paid him and Sacrifices offer'd to him Eumenides had Eggs new-hatch'd offer'd to them, p. 245 their Shrines and Worship ibid. Expiations, for what end instituted by the Heathens, p. 315 their various Rites, p. 321 used publickly and privately in the time of Pestilences p. 322, Oc.

Fi

413

by ench.

.

5.23

Gen

Gen

Gen

Geta God,

n

P

Faith, had Divine Worship paid it, p. 306 how it was anciently esteem'd, p. 307 her Temple, Victims, Essies, &c. ibid.

Fana, whence Buildings are so called p. 167

Fare, Humane Assairs not subject to it, p. 101 this acknowledg'd by Plate, so as not to exclude Divine Providence, ibid. Mathematical thematical Fate, p. 102 Genethliacal Fate, ibid. Stoical Fate, p. 103 Christian Fate, p. 104

p. 103 Christian Fate, Faunus, translated among the Dii Indigeres, and had Divine Honours paid him, p. 168 from whence the Fauns, Sylvans, and Satyrs had their Rise Favour, a Deity among the Romans p. 98 Fever, Fear, and Palenels, were Gods and Goddelles among the Heathens p. 2 Februa, what they are, and when celebrated p. 323 Felicity, worthip'd as a Goddels, p. 313 the Diffinction between Fortune, one of the Names of Heaven, p. 95 held in Veneration by the Antiens, p. 95 her Effigies on Nerva's Coin, ibid. had in great esteem by two Roman Emperors, p. 97 Female Forume had a Temple dedicated to her, p. 253 by whom worshipped, ibid. several other Temples, and Sirnames, what they were, ibid the most magnificent Temple dedicated to Equestrian Fortune P. 254
Fountains, why they Increase when the Sea Decreases, and Decrease upon the Sea's Increasing p. 136 Furies, Pluto's Champions, p. 245 worshipt that they might not hurt, ibid. their Names, Rites, Altars and Offices ibid.
Fire, reckon'd among the number of the Gods, p. 18 Ocellus Lu- canus placed it under the Moon and above the Air, p. 109 where the Moderns placed it, p. 110 not liable to Corruption, ibid, worshipt among the Heathens, p. 112 Nimrod its first Worshipper, ibid. how much the Pythagoreans attributed to it, p. 117 continual Fire committed to Widows by the Grecians, to Virgins by the Italians, p. 118 when the Vestal Fire went out, it portended some publick Calamity p. 120 Tario over degree at Beauty Trule As Call and Orac se of er q.

11 26 7c.

69 bid.

bid. neir

ime

Oc.

161

nci-

167 dg'd

Ma-

tical

Alli, why the Priests of the Great Mother were so called p. 155 Gemini, believed to assist Sailors, p. 84 who they were ibid.
Genius, what it is, and how the Animal Deities were esteemed, p. 235 the Antients attributed two Genii to every Man, p. 236 what they meant by Indulging their Genius, p. 237 worshipt with Wine and Flowers on their Birth days ibid.
Gentile Laicks, what their future State after this Life, p. 3 their Fastings, Alms, Publick Supplications, and Hierarchy, p. 358, seqq.
Geta, Deisied p. 176
God, whether the same was meant among the Gentiles, as we do now, p. 1, 2, & 267 this Name given to all things that are bepesicial or hurtful to Mankind, p. 9 the Worship of the most

AN INDEX.

Good and Great God, is founded in the Heart, p. 10 a necessity of a Perpetual Motion in himself, p. 16 why there were several Appellations given to him, and what they were, p. 22, Ge. called the Preserver of Beings, by Hermes, Ge. p. 89, 90 no doubt but there always was, and always is, and will be, one supream God, p. 255 that he was the Maker of the World, p. 250 his Religious Worship constituted from internal Dictates, p. 258 what those Altars were erected to the Unknown God, p. 267. how Orpheus represented God p. 283 Greeiens, that they worshipped the Sun under divers Names, chiefly that of Apollo, p. 47 they advanced their Heroes among the Gods

Graces, their Offices, p. 221 two among the Lacedemonians, but three among the Athenians, ibid. their Names, ibid. Homer adds a fourth, ibid. their Temple in the middle of the Street, and why they are painted Naked

ibid.

Great Mother, who were her Priests, p. 152 her Image, p. 153 how her Sacred Rites were perform'd p. 155, & seqq.

Eathen Gods, not only meer Men, but some of the most vile, p. 2 not performing an Oath made By Styx, they were punished in Hell Nine thousand Years, and how, p. 147 which of them were called Indigites, and Dii Minorum Gentium, p. 161 Gicero mentions three Glasses of Gods, to whom Divine Adoration was paid, p. 164 which of their Gods were called Consentes, or Dit Majorum Gentium, p. 184 the Rustick Deities named, p. 252 their Gods divided in Supercelestial, Celestial and Subcelestial, p. 275 their several Offices ibid. & segg. Heaven, had Divine Honours decreed it by the Gentiles, p. 15 the Inscription dug up at Rome, viz. To the Most Good and Great, of the World, ibid. some Arguments of the Heathers to prove it a Divine Being from its Height, Greatness, Circular Form, Brightnels, Durablenels, &c. p. $9 whether folid or pervious, ibid. whether given to Corruption or Change, p. 90 its Animal Faibid, &cc. culties and Names Harpies, their Office and Description p. 246

9/10 -500 510

Lau

Lib

Hecate, VVorship'd in ways where three VVays met, p. 63 her Sacrifices left there for the Poor, ibid. her Representation with three Heads, ibid.

Helen and her Husband, had Divine Honours p. 181

Hercules, he the most famous that subdued the Tyrants, p. 166 his Piety, ibid. none of the Heroes so universally worshipt, ibid. Festivals and Sports consecrated to Hercules the Theban, p. 182

Heroes, their VVorship, whether Proper or Symbolical, p. 161, & 283 those Heroes that Deserved well of their Country or of Mankind in general, were translated p. 177 Hesperus, or the Morning and Evening-Star, worshipped next to the Sun and Moon, p. 66 called Phosphorus ibid. Homer, worshipped in an Island of the Cyclades p. 183 Hyacinthus, the Heroe of the Lasedemonians, translated among the Gods p. 184 Hypermnestra had a Shrine built p. 181

Ab or Febovah, one of the Names of GOD Fanus, the first that erected Altars, p. 246 his Shrine and Offerings, p. 247 called Father, ibid. the first Month of the Year named from him, ibid. the Etymology of his Name, ibid. the Inventer of Ships, Bridges and Crowns, ibid. whether the same with Noah, ibid. believed to have the Power of Peace, and VVar in his Hands, p. 248 whence the Custom of opening and shutting the Gates of his Temple, ibid. a Brazen Temple and Castles dedicated to him P. 249 Inca of Peru, established a Supream Deity above the Sun P. 33 Iris, the Mellenger of Juno Funo, a Scourge to Harlots, p. 61 her Statue described, p. 201 worshipt under divers Names, 202 her Temples, ibid. the Confuls used to Sacrifice to her by the Name of Sospita, ibid. the Bridegroom and Bride under that of Pronuba, p. 203 her Rites and Sacrifices, ibid. Ashes so fixt at her Altar, that the strongest VVind could not move them Jupiter held in profound Veneration by the Matrons of Rome. p. 191 many of that Name, and who they were, p. 192 & legg. the several Temples dedicated to him, p. 193 & seqq. his Rites and Sacrifices, ibid. the Name of Fove given to the Sun, p. 45 the Star Jupiter, much Honured by the Antients, p. 75, a fa-

e,

re

h

71, ne

ed

ies

ial

qq.

the

at,

oul

it a

ht-

bid.

Fa-

246

her

tion

ibid.

181

166

ibid.

. 182

leroes.

Abyrinth, anciently four in number, p. 4 how the most perspicacious among the Gentiles freed themselves from that Labyrinth of Errors into which they were plunged, ibid.
Lares, Domestick and Familiar Deities, p. 239 their VVorship, Office, and Effigies, p. 240 their Rites and Sacrifices, ibid. & seq.
Laurel, sacred to Apollo, p. 206 the Ensign of Poets and Triumphers Lemures, hurtful
p. 239
Liberty worshipt as a Goddess among the Romans, p. 311 her Temples ibid.
Lucifer

wous Description of him out of Seneca, p. 75, 76 the most

Benign of all the Planets

Lucifer worshipt by the Saracens and Peruvians

Lucina, presided over VVomen in Child-birth

Luna, or the Moon, had Divine Honours paid her, p. 9 her Essistant on these inferior Regions, p. 52 the Philosophers believed it an Earth as well as Planet, ibid. why its Superficies appears rough and uneven, p. 53 how much it affects the Sea and all Humid Bodies, and also the Brain, ibid. her Names, ibid. & seqq.

Lunaricks, why so called Lustrations, to what end instituted by the Heathens, p. 315 & seqq. the Roman Army being drawn up, their very Ensigns were lustrated before they undertook the Expedition, p. 322 the strange Rites of the Macedonians, in lustrating their Army, ibid. Feilds and Fruits lustrated, p. 223 Lustration Days for

Lycurgus, worshipt by the Spartans Lynceus, Deified, Priapra p. 18

M

p. 181

Pe

Ph

Pi

Mufick,

Ars, one of the Names of the Sun, p. 49. Martial VVolves, p. 50 the VVorship of his Star introduced, p. 72 his various Names, p. 73 his Sacrifices, ibid. how the Lacedemonians kept his Statue and worshipt him, p. 74 his Temples and p. 74, 75 Megalenfian or Megalefian Rites and Games, what they were, p. 157 Memnon, whose Statue spake when the Sun-beams approached its The Mind, for what Reasons the Antients deified it, p. 300 of its Temple in the Capitol Mercury, his Star had Divine Honours paid it, p. 9 the great Power of this Planet, p. 50, 51 Julian the Emperor, the greatest Adorer of this Planet, p. 51 the Exhibitor of Reason and Discourses, p. 69 his several Names, ibid. & seqq. the Inventor of Merchandize, and prefided over the High-ways, p. 70 his Rites, ibid. the Inventer of Letters, Mulick, VVreftling, Geometry, and taught Eloquence, p. 209 his Temples and Statues, &c. ibid. Militades worshipped among the Chersonites p. 183 Minerva, the Goddels of Arts, p. 210 her Altars and Statues, the same with Mercury, ibid. her Image the samous Palladium, ibid. her Victims all very clean, p. 211 her Sacrifices, Go. ibid. Mithras, to whose Honour the Persians kept a perpetual Fire, p. 43 his Rites and Sacrifices ibid. & 44

Mitrax, a precious Stone found in Persia, bright like the Sun, p.44 Moloth, by what Rites worshipped, p. 37 by some taken for

Musick, the antientest of all Studies

Mylitta, no Celestial, but an Animal Deity, p. 55 her Religious Rites

Myrtle, consecrated to Venus by the Antients, p. 219 it's Virtues

N

Avigation to Foreign Parts, found out by the Phenicians p.36

Avigation to Foreign Parts, found out by the Phenicians p.36 Nebe, one of the Names of the Sun

Necessary, had a Temple at Corinth, p. 99 Mother of the Parca, ibid.
Neoptolemus, had Divine Honours paid him

Neptune, formerly had Sacrifices paid him, p. 142 his Feasts among the Romans, ibid. he first taught the Art of Horsemanship p. 143 his prodigious Temple and Statue, ibid. he presided over the Sea, and invented the Art of Navigation

Nymphs, the Name of the Goddesses of Fresh-waters

P. 144

Occulus Beli, a precious Stone shines like the Sun p. 40 Olive and Oak, sacred to Fupiter, p. 199 Invented by Minerva p. 211 Ops, by Tertullian, called the Sow of Divinity, p. 187 the Mother of the Gods, p. 190 what fort of Victims were sacrificed to her p. 191 Oracles, how they were at first imposed on the Heathens, p. 150 Oscilla, or small Images what they were, p. 325 why they were hung on Pine-trees ibid.

Osiris, the Name of many of the Heathen Gods, p. 34 what it signifies in the Egyptian Language ibid.

5

d

5

7 ts

id.

at

at-

nd

n-

70

ng,

nd

id.

83

ies,

um

bid.

ire,

44

P.44

for fick.

Ales, a Rustick Goddess P. 252 Palm, facred to the Sun or Apollo P. 207 Pan, Father of the Fauns and Satyrs, p. 250 why he is called Keeper of Sheep, p. 251 Panick Fear, ibid. worshipt among the Egyptians, ibid. the Author of Apparitions and unufual Sounds, ibid. his Names, with their Interpretation Parca or Destinies, Daughters of Necessity, p. 99 their Names and Worthip Penates or Housbold Gods, whence so called, p. 238t heir Temples, ibid, others of their Names and Epithets, ibid, where and when they were worshipped p. 239 Penitence, or Sorrow for Sins practis'd by the Antients P. 314 Phenicians, Inventers of Letters and Navigation Piety, two forts of it, p. 302 Examples of it, p. 303 a Temple erected to her in the Prison, and why P. 303 Pisces, Punishments; what was the Opinion of the Heathen of R	p. 134 Philo- p. 10 Efteemage and 43, 244 (ewards p. 327

Priests, the Introducers of all the Superstition and Ido the Heathers, p. 2 their Inventions, Foolish and Obscer those of Rhea and the Hierapolitan Goddels, all castrated their Cunning and Religion	ne, p. 41
Q Waternary or Number Four, by which Number the reans used to swear, as most Holy Quies was worship'd, and had a Temple at Rome Quirinus, who was, p. 171 he had an Altar and Temple Quirites, whence so called	p. 105
R Adical Moisture, does not consist in a Watery, but of stance Religion of the Gentiles, condemn'dby the Fathers of the p. 1 almost all Superstitious, p. 3 the Original of the ship, p. 7 & 270, &c. of the Sounder Parts of it, p sequ. four Articles of their Religion always remain p. 354 A Censure with the Occasion of it Rhea, see Earth	p. 129 Church, eir Wor-
	294, 295 P. 163
Albert one of the Name of God	22 197 05

Sabbazii, those who were initiated into those Rites, had a Snake drawn through their Bosom, p. 28 that Worship practised by the Egyptians, unknown to the Greeks and Romans ibid.

Sacrifices; sober ones perform'd with Honey, p. 63 the many and great Sacrifices of the Heathens, to what end directed
p. 298 & 326

Safety, 2 Deity worship'd by the Antients

p. 213

Saturn

Safety, a Deity worship'd by the Antients

Saturn, called Israel by the Phenicians, p. 24 the highest of all the Planets, p. 77 when he reign'd the Golden Age was, ibid. he predominates over the Melancholy and Cholerick, p. 78 reckon'd an Infortune, ibid. the most Antient of all the Heathen Gods, p. 187 the Fable of devouring his Children, p. 188 his Temples and Worthip Sea, its Longitude and Latitude, equal if not exceed that of the Earth, p. 130 the Cause of its Saltness, ibid. of its Ebbing and Flowing, ibid. two other Motions of it, unknown to the Antients, p. 133 the Reason of the Worship paid to it by the Heathens P. 134 Semones, who they were D. 184 Sirens, their Names, Temples and Altars Souls, by the Heathen Theologues, called Bees, from that sweet. ness of living, they supposed them to enjoy, having left the Body Syrian Goddels, who Stars, from their immortal Natures, the Heathens took their first Notice of a God, p. 11 their Divinity establish'd by general Consent, p. 64, 65 & feqq. new Stars appear'd at several times Sumanus, God of the Night Sun, its Worship very antient and universal, p. 32 worshipt under several Names by distinct Nations, p. 33 & seqq. its Light obscur'd in the time of Justinian, p. 92 it was dark for seventeen Days, ibid. the Mexicans say it has been four times extinct, and as often renew'd

f

i

30-

05

05

id.

bid.

ub-

rch, Vor-

7 &

tire,

. 366

295

163

P. 25

had a practi-

s ibid.

ny and directed

3 & 326

P. 21

Saturn

Tarquinius Priscus, Conquer'd the Sabines and dedicated their Arms to Vulcan Temples, who had Power to dedicate them

p. 305
Theology of the Gentile Priests explain'd, p. 270 & seqq. by whom Collected, p. 381, &c. the Opinion of several Modern Divines about the Souls of the Heathers

p. 4, 5

Vejupiter, whence so called, p. 200 his Statue and Temple ibid.
Venus worshipped among the Gods, p. 9 her Rites obscene, p. 42 & 67 her Names and Qualifications, p. 67 & seqq. Worshipped by Virgins and Widows as well as Harlots, p. 216 her Temples and Statues

p. 215 & seqq.
Vesta, a Name of Fire, p. 115 and of the Earth, ibid. her Worship very antient and universal, p. 116 & seqq. her Statue and Rites, p. 233

NDEX

Pirgins, had great Honours decreed them, p. 119, 120 their niber and Names, ibid. their Cultoms and Charge, p. 120, 60c., Religiously Worthipped by the Romans, p.214 her Statue the, the Perfection of Nature, and leads to Happinels, p. 300, 101, 6% the Romans afteriod Divine Worthip to her, p. 301 per Worthip not pleasing to the Heathen Priests p. 303 p. 352 beld in great efteem by the Heathens, p. 114 a very large Temple and Colofs, dedicated to him at Memphis, Ibid. 8231 the Romans erected several Temples to him, p. 115 his Rites and Sacrifices, p. 232 the Inventor of Fire p. 231

TAter, some Reasons for its worship, p. 18 how solemnly the Persians perform'd, p. 19 Thales will have it the etables, ibid. worshipt by the Egyptians, p. 137 some forts of Fish facred to it, ibid. its mystical Name, p. 138 the Persians held it unlawful to spit in Rivers, p. 139 they Sacrificed white Horses to it, p. 149 of all its Names, the Ocean is the chief, p. 142 the Scythians, Celti, and other People worship'd it, p. 148 and at this Day, the Inhabitants of the Parts of the World newly discovered, worship it ibid.

Worship, what was chiefly accounted so at first, p. 11, 12 Diverfiry of Gods, caused divers kinds of V.Vorship, p. 16 the Difference between Divine and Heroical Honours, p. 182 distinguished by Proper, Symbolical and Mixt, p. 295 how far the Heathens agreed with the Christians in their kind of VVorship p. 299 the as elacions, positioner P. # 1 20 fead. shaded to the test of the Earth, that her Worhas small and sport some constant to the standard of the stand $ 5/146

MIL

vdr. 2012 20 22 19 maholdique to soi dies obsens, p. es

